The London Times editorially says: Neither the dignity nor the interests of the British empire can be served by wrangling in parliament. Mr. Gladstone's statement in the house of commons was worthy of England's representative. If it did not breathe defiance, it had the ring of constancy and resolution which neither foreigners nor Englishmen can mistake. It rests with Russia to purge herself of this dishonesty by acts of adequate and conspicuous reparation. The duty imposed upon us is one that England is capable of fulfilling, and we will not flinch until it is fulfilled.

The late Edmond About was writing Germaine, one of his best novels, which was being published as a feuilleton in one of the daily papers. The story, relating to a young consumptive girl who was in love, was approaching the fatal end, when the Empress Eugenie wrote to the author: "I conjure you, do not make the heroine die." About complied with the request, and Germaine was made to live in the novel. —Galignani.

The ex-Empress Eugenie was taking a carriage drive at Farnborough recently, when one of the horses took fright. The animal was killed by being impaled upon the shaft of the cart. The ex-empress and other occupants of the carriage were thrown out, but escaped unhurt. Another account says the ex-empress was riding with the Duc de Bassano in his carriage, and both were thrown violently to the ground and severely bruised and cut. The duke is eighty-two years of age, and there are fears that his injuries will prove fatal. The empress was less seriously hurt.

Rev. Charles G. Ames, of Philadelphia, speaking at Springfield, Mass., recently, said that a native of a Connecticut town once told him that on returning there after thirteen years' absence he found that all the young men of the place he had known in his youth as the sons of wealthy parents had become either sots, paupers or criminals. And yet Connecticut is sometimes called the land of steady habits.

The latest biography of George Eliot which is now being extensively reviewed in the newspapers, says that before her identity was made public Thrckeray thought that her books were not written by a woman. Mrs. Oliphant was sure they were not written by a woman. Mrs. Carlyle conceived the writer to be a "man of middle age, with a wife, from whom he got those beautiful feminine touches in his book, a good many children, and a dog that he has as much foudness for as I have for my little Nero." But Dickens said: "If they originated with no woman, I believe that no man ever before had the art of making himself mentally so like woman since the world began."

Some years before Abraham Lincoln became President a New York firm applied to him regarding the financial standing of one of his neighbors. Mr. Lincoln sent the following suggestive reply: "Yours of the 10th inst. received. I am well acquainted with Mr. —— and know his circumstances. First of all, he has a wife and baby; together they ought to be worth $50,000 to any man. Secondly, he has an office in which there is a table worth $1.50, and three chairs worth, say, $1. Last of all, there is in one corner a large rat hole, which will bear looking into. Respectfully yours.—A. LINCOLN."

Washington E. Connor, who is reported as about to marry Jay Gould's daughter, is almost twenty-five years her senior, and has withstood the tender and fascinating endearments of several of New York's most famous belles. Young George Gould is his chum, and between them the sincerest affection exists. Many have had the erroneous impression that Mr. Connor's success and his present wealth are due to his close intimacy with Mr. Gould. This is a great mistake. Mr. Conner's present position has been secured by indomitable nerve, financial honor, and a shrewd and vigilant determination to grasp all opportunities offered him.

Chattanooga.

The city of Chattanooga, according to its Daily Times, has nearly doubled its population within the past five years, having increased from 13,000 in 1880 to 24,000 in 1885. The manufacturing capital of the city has likewise doubled within that time, standing now at over $5,000,000, Capital in wholesale trade is fully six times as great as the amount so engaged five years ago. During the past year half a million dollars has been invested there in new enterprises, and a million dollars in value of real estate changed hands at prices beyond those asked during the "boom" of 1882. The schools of the city, it is claimed, are in excellent condition, "in fact, among the very best in the country, and growing more efficient as the years pass."

An Electric Shock.

Professor Tyndall told this anecdote in the course of his third lecture on "The Sources of Electricity" in London. He was working with a battery equivalent to fifteen large Leyden jars, in one of his former discourses, and by chance he touched the arm of the machine. It had long been an earnest desire of this learned gentleman to see the effect of this force upon a human being, and he must have felt a peculiar gratification in experimenting upon himself. The whole charge was instantly poured into his body—and nobody knew anything about it except himself. He found, however, that his optic nerves were so curiously affected that for some time his limbs seemed to him to be separated from his body; otherwise he felt nothing at all.

The United States produces forty-eight bushels of cereals for each person, as against the raising of eleven bushels to each person in Great Britain and Ireland.

Sow Wheat.

[illegible] signs of the times, all indicate [illegible] who this spring sows all the [illegible] he can, will have a bonanza. To [illegible] nothing of the war in Europe that threatens to shut off the India wheat and the Russian wheat the prospect is that the surplus now on hand will not balance the shortage caused by the damage to winter wheat, added to the decrease in acreage of that cereal. The prospect last fall was so discouraging [illegible] many did not do as much fall [illegible]ing as they might have done and will make a shortage in the Northwest. We can see no good reason why farmers should not use every available acre for wheat, sowing Scotch Fife wheat whenever practicable. If war should be declared by European powers there would be such a demand for our wheat as never before, and if it should not, we could not reach the surplus of last year and wheat would still be a good thing. In case of a war everything we can produce will be in good demand at good prices.

Economize!

One of the greatest wastes on the farm comes from not using brains; in fact it may be called the greatest, because it is at the bottom of all other wastes. A little thinking will always save much labor. After accomplishing any piece of work most any of us can look back and see how we could have improved on it if we had only thought. As we review our crops of last year we can easily see where the yield could have been increased and now at the beginning of this season is the time to profit by it. By giving a little time to thought we oftimes save ten times the amount in hard labor. We omitted buying an implement that would have saved ten times its cost in one year's use in the time and labor wasted in trying to get along without it. We allow weeds to grow, not thinking to what proportions they will grow by the time the crops are too far advanced to admit of the hoe. A little thought would have saved this waste. And so it goes; a little waste here and there all arising from lack of thought, wastes not at all necessary and easily prevented had we thought. There are wastes from neglect, from laziness, from want of appreciation for cleanliness and thoroughness; wastes from the stock; from the manure heap, from the household. A little thought will save very much to the farmer, and the saving from this means even on a small farm will represent the interest on a considerable capital. The wastes arising from ignorance can very readily be diminished, and are in a large part inexcusable; those arising from carelessness are not deserving of sympathy. The farmer as well as the business man must use business principles to secure the largest success, and the one should be as careful of the outgoes as the other.

The Starting Point.

At the threshold of another year's operations in the field, the garden and on the small fruit plantation, it is well to consider how much the outcome depends upon good plans, good soil, good seed, and good management. If these are present (and as a rule, judicious foresight can supply them) failure will be almost impossible. It is true that the elements can not be controlled, but diligence and the adoption of mitigating measures in case disaster does come, may turn seeming defeat into victory. The first requisite is a good soil in a good condition. Good seed must be procured and properly put in. A common cause of unsatisfactory crop consists in poorly prepared soil; let this work be done well. One of our western seedsmen offer these sensible suggestions, which though not new, can not be too often presented: "Don't cultivate to kill weeds alone, but to admit the air, and thus utilize the fertilizing matters in the soil. Cultivate early, cultivate often, cultivate late, cultivate thoroughly, and you will be troubled very little with weeds. Keep posted; take the papers; no investment pays so well. Ten dollars invested in this way will pay better than stocks and bonds."—Prairie Farmer.

MODERN FEUDALISM.

Farm, Stock and Home.

But few people, perhaps, are familiar with the principles of the Feudal system of the middle ages. Yet every person of average intelligence has a knowledge of the practical workings of that most cruel and pernicious system of government. He knows it consisted of the flagrant abuse of privileges granted to one class of citizens, but denied to another.

The feudal lords, living in luxury and leading riotous lives in their strongly fortified castles, powerful in hordes of obedient vassals, supported their criminal magnificence by frequent raids upon the poor and unprotected farmers and herdsmen who occupied and tilled the fertile valleys lying below the castle crowned crags of their robber lords. For ages these titled bandits preyed upon the honest tillers of the soil, appropriating grain, herds, money, person, and sacrificing the lives even of their poor victims, with no more consideration than they would feel in plucking a branch from a wayside bush, or killing a prowling beast. Such a state of things was not intended by the founders of feudalism, but such outrages were the legitimate fruits of a legislative discrimination between different classes of the citizens of a common country.

The reader of history regards with horror the condition of government and society in those dark and bloody days, and congratulates himself that he lives so many years removed from so gloomy a period in the world's history; still he should temper his congratulations with the thought that the principles of that old despotism still live in the word, live, and flourish too, in this our "land of the free and home of the brave."

Feudalism of the middle ages differs from monopoly of the nineteenth century in method, in degree, but not very much in kind. Every law which in its operation gives to one class of our citizens power not granted to all, becomes a feudal castle—of paper it is true, instead of stone, yet no less efficient in protecting the robber baron, who, crouching within its paper walls, can, under guise of law, plunder the unprotected and unorganized "slaves of toil" quite as effectually as did their old time prototypes.

Laws which allow, or the absence of law which renders possible the creation of business or industrial combinations which closes to any man any avenue of trade in which he may choose to work; which prevents a man working a small coal mine, operating a single oil well locating and running a flouring mill, engaging in the business of buying and selling grain, unhampered and according to the dictates of his own judgment and conscience, are but modernized and sugar-coated recreations of the old laws or customs which made old feudalism possible!

Coal and iron syndicates, standard oil companies, millers' associations are but modern feudal lords, plundering, in a different manner, but no less effectually than did their old progenitors of the middle ages. With railroads for vassals, instead of armed retainers, these modern feudal barons surpass the greed of the ancient ones, who were content with an occasional raid, by exacting royal tribute every day!

The spectacle of corn being burned for fuel in a country containing two-thirds of all the coal in the world, and unlimited means of transportation, is the result of modern feudalism! The price of a poor man's loaf of bread being as high now (as is the case in our principal cities) as it was when the Minnesota farmer was getting a dollar and a half for a bushel of wheat, is another tribute we are paying to our modernized feudal system! Our feudal lords of to-day do not exact their unholy tribute with fire and sword and predatory raids, but they do it by strong combinations which choke the channels of trade, by unjust discriminations, and strangle that healthy competition which is absolutely necessary to the prosperity of producer and consumer.

We have no objection to men getting rich, some men getting vastly richer than others, providing they do it in channels that are open to all, and succeed only by reason of superior genius; but we do object to combinations so powerful that they can deny rights of trade or transportation to Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown, who are, or should be, precisely the same, under the law, as any incorporated company, however rich it may be. Slavery has not been abolished in this country! The farmer who is compelled to sell his wheat to a certain party at a fiat price, deprived of the benefits of active competition, is a slave—a slave to modern feudalism!

These abuses can be corrected, these wrongs righted, quietly, decently and in order, but there must be unity of action, resolution and ability. Our masters are now strong in brain and money, their serfs are strong only in numbers, but this strength is impotent unless it is properly organized and led. That it is not so in Minnesota is plainly evident in the course of our Legislature this winter. Composed largely of the class who suffers most from the tyranny we have alluded to, we had a right to expect something at their hands which would correct some of our abuses, right some of our wrongs, at least; but we have been disappointed. We must not despair, however, but keep up the agitation, and eventually we will find the men who have the ability and courage to maintain that, in this State, at least, every man shall be equal before the law.

FARM NOTES.

Farm, Stock and Home.

TOBACCO IN MINNESOTA.

Tobacco is a semi-tropical plant, but it has been cultivated in this State with considerable success. In portions of Wisconsin, it has proved to be a profitable crop. We do not know that its cultivation can ever become general in this latitude, but it must be remembered that our summer climate has about the same degree of heat that is experienced in Ohio. We would like to see more experiments made by our farmers with it. We can raise the early varieties with considerable certainty, but whether our seasons are long enough to mature the later varieties remains to be experimented with. The plant is easily injured by the frost.

It is a very easy matter to raise early potatoes sufficient for the use of a moderate sized family by cutting the seed so that only one eye will be on a piece, then place a little sawdust or dry earth in the bottom of a box or barrel; place the seed on the sawdust or earth on it, and then add more of the latter, plant more seed, then fill up again with the sawdust, and so continue until the requisite quantity is disposed of; set in a warm place. When springtime comes the seed will be nicely started and can be readily removed to the potato patch. Plant carefully, and be cautious not to break the sprouts. In this way new potatoes can be had by the 15th of June.

We earnestly hope that the matter of seeding down land this spring will be considered by the farmers. The more pasturage and hay the farmers have, the more cattle they will have, and the more cattle they have, the more money they will have. In this climate, land intended to be occupied with grass, should be seeded down in the spring. Don't spare the grass seed. In all countries where there is a lot of stock, the farmers are the most forehanded. As long and as tedious as our winters are, stock of any description can be kept just about as cheap as in Northern Ohio. The reason is our prairie soil produces such abundant crops of fodder.

An esteemed correspondent wants to know how much tillable land should, in our opinion, be put into wheat this spring. This depends very much on the state of the soil to be occupied with grain, but in no instance, unless it is on new breaking, should there be over one-fourth of the land bestowed to wheat. If a farmer has one hundred acres of tillable land, twenty-five of it should be sown to wheat. It is a diversity of crops that pays in the Northwest, and we would sow enough wheat to make up that diversity. Good husbandry for the next year will be necessary in order to make up for this season's low prices.

Many of our most successful, prosperous and forehanded farmers have found by actual experience, that it is a good way to feed out all the surplus crops produced on the farm to their stock. Instead of selling their oats, corn, barley and root crops, they fatten their cattle, sheep and hogs, and sell the stock. It is contended that grain made into beef, mutton and pork, brings a better price when disposed of in that manner than it does when carted to the market towns and sold by the bushel. We have no personal experience in this matter, but it seems to us the experiment is worth a trial.

If the present low prices in wheat, corn and oats last until the middle of spring, when most of the cows come fresh, we hope dairymen will feed up strong with these low priced grains and see what good effect they will have on the cows, when we hope the result will prove so satisfactory the practice will not be abandoned when the prices of these grains get back to their normal condition.

Always be regular and systematic in feeding stock. Regularity is the best balance wheel of agriculture; derange this, and the machine run down. Stated hours and specified quantities, graduated according to circumstances, should invariably be observed. Neither too little, nor too much, too often, nor too seldom, is the true policy.

No farm house should be without a patch of currants. They take but little space, are hardy, polific bearers, and produce the choicest kind of fruit. It requires no skill to cultivate them—give them half a chance and they will return more real value than any other product in the garden.

The farmer who loses half an hour daily going for or hunting displaced tools, loses one hundred and fifty hours per year, or about half a month working time. There is nothing like having everything in its place, unless it is in having a place for everything.

American Farmer.

"Sam, you are not honest. Why do you put all the good peaches on the top of the measure and the little ones below?" "Same reason, sah, dat makes de front of your house all marble, and de back gate chiefly slop barrel, sah."

An old farmer after an experience of forty years, says he finds no food so good for cattle as scalded oats. For cows and sheep when coming in, especially is this food of great value. The calves and lambs will be strong, healthy and active, and the parent in good heart and flush of milk.

An eastern family received a telegram from the west announcing the sudden demise of a relative, and they replied: "Send on the remains at once." No telegram was received in answer, but in a few days a letter came, saying simply: "There ain't no remains; he war kicked by a mule."

In raising heifer calves designed for the dairy, avoid giving food of a starchy, oily nature designed to lay on fat. What is wanted in a milch cow is a well developed frame, a capacious stomach and vigorous digestion. A cow of this kind will make the best use of full rations when put into the dairy.

When a man milks a cow he should not attempt to smoke a cigar at the same time. A young man out in the country tried it, and got along well enough until he lowered his head and touched the cow's flank with the lighted end of his weed. The next instant himself and cigar were dreadfully "put out." The cow introduced about two tons weight into one of her hind legs, and then passed it under the milker's jaw. When he ceased whirling around, and the myriads of stars he saw had disappeared, he said farming was the hardest work a man could put his hands to.

[illegible] Wheat.

[illegible] all indicate [illegible] spring sows all the [illegible] will have a bonanza. To [illegible] nothing of the wars in Europe that threatens to shut off the India wheat and the Russian wheat, the prospect is that the surplus now on hand will not balance the shortage caused by the damage to winter wheat, added to the [illegible] acreage of that cereal. The [illegible] last fall was so discouraging [illegible] many did not do as much fall [illegible] as they might have done and [illegible] will make a shortage in the North[illegible]. We can see no good reason why farmers should not use every available acre for wheat, sowing Scotch Fife wheat whenever practicable. If war should be declared by European powers there would be such a demand for our wheat as never before, and if it should not, we could not reach the surplus of last year and wheat would still be a good thing. In case of a war everything we can produce will be in good demand at good prices.

Economize!

One of the greatest wastes on the farm comes from not using brains, in fact it may be called the greatest, because it is at the bottom of all other wastes. A little thinking will always save much labor. After accomplishing any piece of work most any of us can look back and see how we could have improved on it if we had only thought. As we review our crops of last year we can easily see where the yield could have been increased and now at the beginning of this season is the time to profit by it. By giving a little time to thought we oftimes save ten times the amount in hard labor. We omitted buying an implement that would have saved ten times its cost in one year's use in the time and labor wasted in trying to get along without it. We allow weeds to grow, not thinking to what proportions they will grow by the time the crops are too far advanced to admit of the hoe. A little thought would have saved this waste. And so it goes; a little waste here and there all arising from lack of thought, wastes not at all necessary, and easily prevented had we thought. There are wastes from neglect, from laziness, from want of appreciation for cleanliness and thoroughness; wastes from the stock, from the manure heap, from the household. A little thought will save very much to the farmer, and the saving from this means even on a small farm will represent the interest on a considerable capital. The wastes arising from ignorance can very readily be diminished, and are in a large part inexcusable; those arising from carelessness are not deserving of sympathy. The farmer as well as the business man must use business principles to secure the largest success and the one should be as careful of the outgoes as the other.

The Starting Point.

At the threshold of another year's operations in the field, the garden and on the small fruit plantation, it is well to consider how much the outcome depends upon good plans, good soil, good seed and good management. If these are present (and as a rule judicious foresight can supply them) failure will be almost impossible. It is true that the elements can not be controlled but diligence and the adoption of mitigating measures in case disaster does come, may turn seeming defeat into victory. The first requisite is a good soil in a good condition. Good seed must be procured and properly put in. A common cause of unsatisfactory crops consists in poorly prepared soil; let this work be done well. One of our western seedsmen offer these sensible suggestions, which though not new, can not be too often presented: "Don't cultivate to kill weeds alone, but to admit the air, and thus utilize the fertilizing matters in the soil; cultivate early, cultivate often, cultivate late, cultivate thoroughly, and you will be troubled very little with weeds." Keep posted; take the papers; no investment pays so well. Ten dollars invested in this way will pay better than stocks and bonds.—Prairie Farmer.

MODERN FEUDALISM.

Farm, Stock and Home.

But few people perhaps are familiar with the principles of the feudal system of the middle ages. Yet every person of average intelligence has a knowledge of the practical workings of that most cruel and pernicious system of government. He knows it consisted of the flagrant abuse of privileges granted to one class of citizens, but denied to another. The feudal lords, living in luxury and leading riotous lives in their strongly fortified castles, powerful in hordes of obedient vassals, supported their criminal magnificence by frequent raids upon the poor and unprotected farmers and herdsmen who occupied and tilled the fertile valleys lying below the castle crowned crags of their robber lords. For ages these titled bandits preyed upon the honest tillers of the soil, ap[illegible] grain, herds, money, [illegible] common country. [illegible] of history [illegible] horror the condition of government and society in those dark and bloody days, and congratulates himself that he lives so many years removed from so gloomy a period in the world's history, still he should temper his congratulations with the thought that the principles of that old despotism still live in the world, live and flourish too, in this our land of the free and home of the brave.

Feudalism of the middle ages differs from monopoly of the nineteenth century in method, in degree, but not very much in kind. Every law which in its operation gives to one class of our citizens power not granted to all, becomes a feudal castle—of paper it is true, instead of stone, yet no less efficient in protecting the robber baron, who, crouching within its paper walls, can, under guise of law, plunder the unprotected and unorganized slaves of toil, quite as effectually as did their old time prototypes.

Laws which allow, or the absence of law which renders possible the creation of business or industrial combinations which closes to any man any avenue of trade in which he may choose to work; which prevents a man working a small coal mine, operating a single oil well, locating and running a flouring mill, engaging in the business of buying and selling grain, unhampered and according to the dictates of his own judgment and conscience, are but modernized and sugar-coated recreations of the old laws or customs which made old feudalism possible!

Coal and iron syndicates, standard oil companies, millers' associations are but modern feudal lords, plundering, in a different manner, but no less effectually than did their old progenitors of the middle ages. With railroads for vassals, instead of armed retainers, these modern feudal barons surpass the greed of the ancient ones, who were content with an occasional raid, by exacting royal tribute every day!

The spectacle of corn being burned for fuel in a country containing two-thirds of all the coal in the world, and unlimited means of transportation, is the result of modern feudalism! The price of a poor man's loaf of bread being as high now (as is the case in our principal cities) as it was when the Minnesota farmer was getting a dollar and a half for a bushel of wheat, is another tribute we are paying to our modernized feudal system! Our feudal lords of to-day do not exact their unholy tribute with fire and sword and predatory raids, but they do it by strong combinations which choke the channels of trade, by unjust discriminations, and strangle that healthy competition which is absolutely necessary to the prosperity of producer and consumer.

We have no objection to men getting rich, some men getting vastly richer than others, providing they do it in channels that are open to all, and succeed only by reason of superior genius, but we do object to combinations so powerful that they can deny rights of trade or transportation to Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown, who are, or should be, precisely the same, under the law, as any incorporated company, however rich it may be. Slavery has not been abolished in this country! The farmer who is compelled to sell his wheat to a certain party at a fiat price, deprived of the benefits of active competition, is a slave—a slave to modern feudalism!

These abuses can be corrected, the wrongs righted, quietly, decently and in order, but there must be unity of action, resolution and ability. Our masters are now strong in brain and money, their serfs are strong only in numbers, but this strength is impotent unless it is properly organized and led. That it is not so in Minnesota is plainly evident in the course of our Legislature this winter. Composed largely of the class who suffers most from the tyranny we have alluded to, we had a right to expect something at their hands which would correct some of our abuses, right some of our wrongs. At least, but we have been disappointed. We must not despair, however, but keep up the agitation, and eventually we will find the men who have the ability and courage to maintain that, in this State at least, every man shall be equal before the law.

FARM NOTES.

Farm, Stock and Home.

TOBACCO IN MINNESOTA.

Tobacco is a semi-tropical plant, but it has been cultivated in this State with considerable success. In portions of Wisconsin it has proved to be a profitable crop. We do not know that its cultivation can ever become general in this latitude, but it must be remembered that our summer climate has about the same degree of heat that is experienced in Ohio. We would like to see more experiments made by our farmers with it. We can raise the early varieties with considerable certainty, but whether our seasons are long enough to mature the later varieties remains to be experimented with. The plant is easily injured by the frost.

It is a very easy matter to raise early potatoes [illegible] potato patch. Plant carefully, and be cautious not to break the sprouts. In this way new potatoes can be had by the 15th of June.

We earnestly hope that the matter of seeding down land this spring will be considered by the farmers. The more pasturage and hay the farmers have, the more cattle they will have, and the more cattle they have, the more money they will have. In this climate, land intended to be occupied with grass should be seeded down in the spring. Don't spare the grass seed. In all countries where there is a lot of stock the farmers are the most forehanded. As long and as tedious as our winters are, stock of any description can be kept just about as cheap as in Northern Ohio. The reason is, our prairie soil produces such abundant crops of fodder.

An esteemed correspondent wants to know how much tillable land should, in our opinion, be put into wheat this spring. This depends very much on the state of the soil to be occupied with grain, but in no instance, unless it is on new breaking, should there be over one-fourth of the land bestowed to wheat. If a farmer has one hundred acres of tillable land, twenty-five of it should be sown to wheat. It is a diversity of crops that pays in the Northwest, and we would sow enough wheat to make up that diversity. Good husbandry for the next year will be necessary in order to make up for this season's low prices.

Many of our most successful, prosperous and forehanded farmers have found by actual experience that it is a good way to feed out all the surplus crops produced on the farm to their stock. Instead of selling their oats, corn, barley and root crops, they fatten their cattle, sheep and hogs, and sell the stock. It is contended that grain made into beef, mutton and pork brings a better price when disposed of in that manner than it does when carted to the market towns and sold by the bushel. We have no personal experience in this matter, but it seems to us the experiment is worth a trial.

If the present low prices in wheat, corn and oats last until the middle of spring, when most of the cows come fresh, we hope dairymen will feed up strong with these low priced grains and see what good effect they will have on the cows, when we hope the result will prove so satisfactory the practice will not be abandoned when the prices of these grains get back to their normal condition.

Always be regular and systematic in feeding stock. Regularity is the best balance wheel of agriculture; derange this, and the machine run down. Stated hours and specified quantities, graduated according to circumstances, should invariably be observed. Neither too little, nor too much, too often, nor too seldom, is the true policy.

No farm house should be without a patch of currants. They take but little space, are hardy, prolific bearers, and produce the choicest kind of fruit. It requires no skill to cultivate them—give them half a chance and they will return more real value than any other product in the garden.

The farmer who loses half an hour daily going for or hunting displaced tools, loses one hundred and fifty hours per year, or about half a month working time. There is nothing like having everything in its place, unless it is in having a place for everything.—American Farmer.

"Sam, you are not honest. Why do you put all the good peaches on the top of the measure and the little ones below?" "Same reason, sah, dat makes de front of your house all marble, and de back gate chiefly slop barrel, sah."

An old farmer after an experience of forty years, says he finds no food so good for cattle as scalded oats. For cows and sheep when coming in especially is this food of great value. The calves and lambs will be strong, healthy and active, and the parent in good heart and flush of milk.

An eastern family received a telegram from the west announcing the sudden demise of a relative, and they replied, "Send on the remains at once." No telegram was received in answer, but in a few days a letter came, saying simply: "There ain't no remains, he was kicked by a mule."

In raising heifer calves designed for the dairy, avoid giving food of a starchy, oily nature, designed to lay on fat. What is wanted in a milch cow is a well developed frame, a capacious stomach and vigorous digestion. A cow of this kind will make the best use of full rations when put into the dairy.

When a man milks a cow he should not attempt to smoke a cigar at the same time. A young man out in the country tried it, and got along well enough until he lowered his head and touched the cow's flank with the lighted end of his weed. The next instant himself and cigar were dreadfully spilled. The cow introduced about two tons weight into one [illegible]

[Communicated.]

Crookston, April 13, 1885.

ED. JOURNAL:—The intimate friends and acquaintances of our eloquent attorney, P. A. Dufour, have been surprised and exasperated by the conduct of the editors of some of our county papers. Doctors Kimball, Jones, Allen and McMurdie, of Minneapolis, agreed and decided officially that Mr. Dufour's prostration is the result of hard work, intense thought, insomnia, and particularly some trouble of a private nature which they could not account for, but inferred that it resulted from business transactions in which he had been greatly deceived and wronged. This last cause was the most baneful of all, and to it must be attributed, to a large extent, our well known barrister's temporary insanity. From the conduct of the aforesaid editors we are inclined to believe that there is some truth in the old proverb, the essence of which is, "they all kick a man when he is down." The friends of Mr. Dufour will expect, after this statement of facts, that the St. Hilaire, Red Lake Falls and Fisher papers will copy this. We are glad to be able to say that in a few weeks, from present indications, Mr. Dufour will have recovered his right mind, and in a few months he will be ready for business.

X.

The following telegram was received from A. Manvel, general manager of the St. P. M. & N. Ry., last week:

St. Paul, April 7th.

A telegram from Mr. Booth, of the Elk Valley Farming Company, received yesterday, states that wheat was two cents higher in St. Louis on account of bad reports of injury to winter wheat. Minneapolis millers have advises from other sections to the same effect. Everything indicates a much better range of prices for northern wheat another season.

Duluth & Winnipeg.

St. Paul Pioneer Press.

DULUTH, Special Telegram, April 9.—Hon. Jas. Hill, of Roberts, Wis., one of the owners of the Duluth & Winnipeg, arrived here to-day on business connected with that road. He recently went to New York to consult with capitalists about the building of the road. Interviewed to-day he said: "I returned from New York Tuesday. During my visit there I talked over the matter of building the Duluth & Winnipeg with a number of capitalists. Arrangements for building the road within a specified time are nearly completed. It will be necessary to complete the road to receive aid from the country to the amount of $500,000. We look to St. Louis county for $200,000, Polk county for a like amount and the balance from other places benefitted by the road. However, we are not in a position just at present to say what we do want; but when the time comes we will come squarely before the people of Duluth and St. Louis county, and tell what we require. Stories that the road has to be built through swamps and other difficult places are utterly without foundation, and were started by enemies of the road to injure the prospects of securing the necessary capital. Yes, I feel well satisfied with eastern capitalists, and I think I can safely promise you that engineers will be on the proposed line of the road inside of a month."

Small Farms.

Grand Forks Plaindealer.

A writer gives the following as his method of managing his 100 acre farm: "My farm contains about 100 acres of farming land, most of which is limestone soil, the balance sandy loam. I have fenced in four equal tracts, nearly as possible. For convenience, at the corner where they all join, I have a good well, arranged to furnish stock water for each field. I manage to keep fifty acres in cultivation, fifty acres in clover, each year, as follows: Twenty-five acres in corn, twenty-five in wheat. When the corn is cut off I seed this field to wheat and the following spring to clover. I aim to take a crop of corn, then a crop of wheat, then back to clover in two years, and I find this is as long as clover should stand to be profitable. By this method I manage to keep the land in a high state of cultivation without the use of commercial fertilizers.

I raised stock enough to eat up all the surplus corn, hay, etc. I stack the straw and feed around the stack. Toward spring I throw it down, so the stock can tramp it down. In this condition it rots much faster and is ready to haul out sooner. This manure I spread in the poorest places when I have leisure and it is good hauling. By doing this I keep nearly everything on the farm except the surplus wheat which I market as soon as threshed, while it is in the sacks. This saves a large per cent. on shrinkage, besides extra handling and you have the use of your money. Any field I have will bring a good crop. I always have clover sod to put corn that has lain two years and takes it no longer and is not so much expense to farm good land as it is poor land. The pay is surer, besides the satisfaction of seeing your crops in a thriving condition and promising a good reward.

BURPEE'S WELCOME OATS.

Of this oat the proprietor says: "The Welcome Oats grew from four to six feet high, with long straight straw not liable to be prostrated by wind or rain, and ripens from a week to two weeks ahead of other oats. The heads are very large and handsome, branching freely on all sides and from 16 to 23 inches in length. They weigh from 47 to 51½ lbs. per bushel, and often grow from 40 to 76 stalks from one oat."

From 10 oz. of seed sowed in 1883, I harvested 80 lbs. In 1884 I sowed this on 3 acres. It measured one and one-half bushels. It yielded 200 bushels. Parties desiring to procure seed can do so for $1 per bushel at Stone & Pinkerton's Warehouse, Crookston, where samples may be seen.

Group of Grade Friesian Calves on Farm of Wilcox & Liggett, Benson, Minn.

Our illustration of a group of grade Friesien calves, shows the wonderful prepotency of pure bred sires. The dams of these calves were native cows, all colors and forms and sizes, and yet the calves, from a Friesian bull, are invariably marked like the sire, and not only like him in color, but in form and style. This is one of the strongest reasons for using pure bred bulls. It is a law of nature that the parent of the purest blood has the greatest influence on the offspring. The purer the blood of the sire, the more certain his calves, no matter what the dam is, are to be like him.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Minneapolis Tribune.

A REMARKABLE BUTTER YIELD.

The Jersey cow, Mary Anne of St. Lambert, owned by V. E. Fuller of Hamilton, Ont., has for some time enjoyed the distinction of giving the largest butter yield on record. This remarkable yield was thirty-six pounds twelve and one-fourth ounces of salted butter, or thirty-five pounds eight and three-fourths ounces of unsalted butter, in seven days. The test was taken by agents appointed by the American Jersey cattle club under circumstances which would leave no reasonable doubt of its correctness. When the fact is taken into consideration that a yield of two pounds a day is quite a remarkable yield, the performance of Mary Anne of St. Lambert can be appreciated. But this hitherto unexcelled record has been, according to the Baltimore American, recently surpassed by a Maryland Jersey with the apparently impossible yield of 46¼ pounds in one week. An agent specially appointed by the Alderney association to test the weekly production of butter by the famous Jersey cow Princess Second, owned by the heirs of the late Samuel Shoemaker, in Green Spring Valley, Baltimore County, gave the seven days ending March 4th to a close investigation of the product. The investigation was made with the greatest possible care, each milking being in the presence of the agent, and sealed up by him to prevent additions to it. The butter produced was daily weighed and noted, and the result, as authoritatively established by the agent of the association, made the total product of butter for the week 46¼ pounds, or over 6¼ pounds a day.

THE STATE FAIR GROUNDS.

The Minnesota State Agricultural society closed its two days' session Thursday, and adjourned to April 23d. Members of the association in attendance were: N. P. Clark, St. Cloud, president; C. A. DeGraff, vice president; R. C. Judson, Farmington, secretary; J. Wilcox, Northfield, treasurer; James McHench, Martin County; Colonel Clarke Chambers, Steel County; Hon. J. F. Norrish, Dakota County; John Cooper, Stevens County; Adam Bohland, Ramsey County, and J. S. Harris, Houston County.

The first day of the meeting was devoted to revising the premium list and the list now offers premiums larger than any other association of the kind in the west. In sweepstakes for the best herd of cattle exhibited by one individual the first premium is $500. The premiums on horticultural products were raised; to the person who exhibits the largest and greatest variety of vegetables, the following premiums are offered: First, $100; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. To the county which makes the largest display of grains, grasses, and vegetables will be given a silk banner.

Yesterday the entire board went out to the fair grounds to overlook the lay of the land. Engineers will be put to work immediately surveying the ground, and matters will be pushed until the buildings are completed. An extra wide race course, a mile stretch, will be laid out, and the managers claim it will be one of the best in the United States.

A BLOW AT BUTTERINE.

Dairy Commissioner Rice and his assistant, Mr. Howard, propose to rigidly enforce the butterine law passed at the last session of the legislature, and will commence to-day to distribute circulars among manufacturers and dealers, stating the law to them, and threatening its enforcement if it is violated. It is claimed that over 1,000,000 pounds of butterine have been sold in this city during the past year, and the supply has cut the price of dairy butter in the hands of the farmer down to eight cents a pound in some portions of the State. Commissioner Rice has headquarters at Zumbrota.

SURFACE MANURING.

The result of a series of experiments suggested by the Massachusetts board of agriculture for the purpose of determining the depth to place barnyard manures, was in favor of a depth not exceeding four inches. A further conclusion was reached, that for the potato and other shallow rooted crops the best method was to put the manure still nearer the surface. Undoubtedly the depth to which manure should be covered when incorporated with the soil depends largely upon the kind of soil, manure and the crop grown. The more shallow the depth at which the manure is placed the finer should the soil be pulverized, in order to prevent the evaporation of moisture surrounding the manure, so that it will the more speedily become decomposed. When the surface soil is underlaid with a sandy, or loose, gravelly sub-soil, it is an absolute waste of manure to plow it in deeply, there to decay, because the soluble parts would leach downward without being utilized. In soils of such a character the surface application of well decomposed manure is an almost indispensable requisite of success. Meadows or such lands can be manured to the best advantage by hauling out the manure and top-dressing them, even if the land is not plowed for a year or two thereafter. In one case on such lands, where the hay crop had dwindled down to about one-fourth of what it should have been, the manure was scattered as fast as it accumulated at the barn, on the most exposed and poorest places, and the result was an abundant yield. An instance is on record where the keeper of a livery stable, in which fifteen horses were kept, spread all the manure on one and a half acres of meadow land for several years in succession, and took off at three crops, seven and a half tons of good hay in a year—as much as he would have gotten had the manure been spread on three or four acres.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The largest flax oil mill in the world has been erected in Sioux City, Iowa.

Ensilage will enable farmers to quadruple the number of stock they keep.

Over 50,000 acres are yearly planted to sorghum in the State of Kansas.

One hundred and fifty thousand pounds of butterine are made in Chicago daily.

Feed until the grass becomes mature enough to not produce scours in the stock.

It is indicated by census returns that insanity is more frequent among farmers' wives than in any other class.

The drive well patent has run out, expired January 14, so that any one can now use the driven tube for a well without danger of prosecution.

Governor Stamford, of California, has a Holstein cow on his Vina ranch that in thirty-one days gave 1,637 pounds of milk, several pounds more than the gross weight of the cow.

"Uncle, what is the hardest lesson you ever had to learn?" asked a young lady of a veteran statesman known for his strong prejudices. "That the man who differs with me, not only in opinions but in principles, may be as sincere and honest as I am," was the reply.

A lady returning from an unprofitable visit to church declared that "when she saw the shawls of those Smiths, and then thought of the things her own poor girls had to wear, if it wasn't for the consolation of religion she did not know what she should do."

Old "Saws" Re-Set.

"You can't make a whistle out of a pig's tail."

It is impossible to construct an instrument which will emit a shrill sound, by forcing the breath through it, from the caudal appendage of an adolescent porker. "All is not gold that glitters."

Not everything that shines brightly, with either a steady or scintillating light is a precious metal of auriferous origin.

"Make hay while the sun shines."

Improve that time when the glorious orb of day is emitting his most fervent rays, by cutting down and otherwise manipulating the proper variety of herbage which when desicrated serves as provender for domestic quadrupeds.

"A blunt knife shows a dull wife."

Should the instrument used in the kitchen, and at the table, for cutting, not have a properly sharpened edge, it evinces that the housewife is lax the performance of her duties, or in overseeing the duties of her domestics.

"The stone that keeps rolling will gather no moss."

The mass of mineral matter, be it either pebbly or bowlder, which is constantly kept revolving upon the earth's surface, will not experience any adhesion of a cellular plant indigenous to the north side of stationary rocks and ancient trees.

"If wishes were horses beggars might ride."

Medicants would be able to indulge in equestrain exercise if the desires of mankind were transformed into equine quadrupeds.

"Early to bed, and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

Retiring at a reasonable hour to one's couch, and quickly succumbing to Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep, has a tendency to keep one free from many of the ills which flesh is heir to, causes indirectly the pocket-book to become plethoric, and the bank account large, and last, but not least, increases the sum total of one's knowledge and capacity to use it understandingly.—[H. DON'T SKIP THIS.

So many schemes are put before the public for the increase of newspaper circulation, which seem to be plausible and yet are fraudulent, that when a legitimate, honest effort is made to build up the circulation of a legitimate, honest paper, by legitimate, honest means, people who have been so many times duped, are very slow to respond to the genuine scheme. We are led to this train of thought by a perusal of the advertisement of The American Rural Home, of Rochester, N. Y. published in this issue of our paper, to which we call the attention of our readers. We are acquainted with both paper and publishers and take pleasure in recommending it as one of the very best farm and family journals in this country. Every person who sends one dollar for a year's subscription to the paper receive a handsome present which is donated by the advertising patrons of the payer. These premiums consist of cattle, Land, Reapers and Mowers, Plows, Books, Pictures, Organs, and thousands of other valuable articles. The Rural Home Co. is endorsed by Hon. Cornelius R. Parsons, Mayor of Rochester, to whom you can write if you have any doubts as to its reliability. It will pay you to send for sample copy if nothing more than to get a look at this great twelve-page, sixty column illustrated paper. Address Rural Home Co. Limited, Rochester, N. Y.

'ROUND HOME.

J. W. Lilly is off for a visit to his old home in the south.

We want two thousand bushels of potatoes, at 25 cents.
[51-52] Fontaine & Anglim.

Mr. W. Edwards and Ben. S. Fogg, of New Era Grader fame have returned and will open the campaign soon.

Hon. Jas. Hill, of Warren, Wis., was in the city last week on business. He has large landed interests in Polk Co.

G. H. Palmer has opened out a justice shop on Second Street and seems to be selling a good deal of it just now.

And now it is H. M. Pierce who is called upon to rejoice over the arrival of a new client—a fine healthy heir, which event occurred on Monday evening.

The opera house was filled to overflowing on Sunday evening the occasion being a Union Temperance rally. Much interest is manifest and hundreds are signing the pledge.

Fontaine & Anglim want all the potatoes in the country. [51-52]

Mr. Filiatrault was in St. Paul last week and intimates that the probability of a large hotel being built here this summer is almost a surety. We shall hear more of this later on.

The Jolly Pathfinders have not shown up as yet but it is probable that they will be here at a later date. The city will probably be billed this week for Kate Claxton who appears on May 2d.

Chemical cloth-cleaning and repairing at cheapest rates, by Gjerberg Bro's,
[50-52] Broadway, near P. O.

Seeding is well advanced in the Red River Valley while a Steuben Co., N. Y., local paper reports a large body of slush snow yet on the ground. We are at least two weeks ahead of that record.

Henry Shepard is off to the Thirteen Towns on important business. By the by he wishes to remark that he is still constable in this city ready and eligible to do business with promptness and dispatch.

We are informed that Ira D. Blanchard has obtained a flowing well for E. O. Flanders at a depth of about 200 feet, and that he has taken his machine to the farm of H. B. Davis, where he will try for another.

Farmers who wanted to sow wheat were growling about the rains of the early part of the week but farmers who are getting into stock-raising were smiling to see how these same rains start the new grass. That's the difference.

Prof. Cameron, who is in our city with a view to organizing a class in book-keeping has postponed his lecture until next Monday evening owing to the great interest in temperance matters. He hopes to deliver said lecture on Monday evening next at Ericsson's Hall. All should hear it.

The annual reform spasm is on again and we hear rumors of arrests of saloonmen for violation of the laws. This thing occurs with wonderful regularity every time a new council organizes and lasts about four or five weeks. Saloon men no more than any other class should be allowed to violate the law, but to be consistent the authorities should "keep it up."

The Minneapolis Evening Journal is very much improved of late. It has a new dress a new press and a new head and is now the best evening paper in the State. Arriving, as it does at this city on the 10 a. m. train makes it more valuable to us as it brings us news at least 12 hours in advance of the morning papers. If you want to get the latest from the seat of war take the Minneapolis Evening Journal.

The Red Lake Falls Messenger is agitated on the fish question, just now claiming that Chase's dam prevents fish getting as far up the river as Red Lake Falls. It is right for the Messenger to be interested in the food question being probably in the same fix as the residents of Crookston were when Crookston was only a little hamlet. It was "cat-fish or no breakfast" with them and we don't blame the Messenger for howling. However we think its fears are groundless as the dam in question is not high enough to form a fish blockade. We called the attention of Mr. Chase to the agitation and he tells us that his attention was called to the same question as soon as the dam was finished and that he submitted it to an expert in such matters who informed him that it was no bar to fish ascending the river. Moreover fish have been seen passing over the apron in schools and many fish have been taken out of the pond above the dam and we see no reason why they should not be as plentiful as ever at Red Lake Falls. Mr. Chase has no desire to deprive the Messenger of its breakfast, and if the Messenger can show that he is doing so Mr. Chase will at once negotiate with all fish east ward bound to supply the deficiency.

Thunder Tuesday evening.

The recent showers will start the grass booming.

The Studio cigar is what Herb called it when he handed us a sample, remarking casually that it was the boss five cent weed in the business.

THE REFORM COUNCIL.

At the first meeting of the Reform Council the new members were duly installed, and L. Fontaine elected President. The salary of the officials were fixed as follows: Chief of Police, $900; Policemen, $600; Clerk, $400; Treasurer, $400, and engineer of pump house $600 per annum. John Dowling was appointed chief of police, E. C. Davis city engineer, and Chas. Greenhalgh engineer at the pump house, which appointments were confirmed. The bonds of city officials were fixed as follows: Treasurer, $15,000; Clerk, $1,000; Constables, $500. Those officials presented their bonds which were approved. A resolution limiting liquor licenses to those parties now in the business in the city was adopted, also a resolution to issue city bonds. The bids for doing city printing were considered, when it was found that The Journal had offered to do the work at fair living rates and the Chronicle at starvation rates so the Chronicle was allowed to do the work for nothing. A motion prevailed that the mayor issue a proclamation to enforce the Sunday liquor law. At the extra session Wm. Watts was appointed city attorney, R. A. Wilkinson comptroller and John McKinnon, chief of the fire department, all of which appointments were confirmed. G. A. Benson was recommended for a policeman. Not confirmed. The salary of the city attorney was fixed at $400. and of the comptroller at $600 per annum. The reports of treasurer and recorder read and approved. Proposition of the Merchants' National Bank as depository of city funds accepted and bonds in $20,000 approved. The clerk was instructed to advertise for bids for the work of building approaches to the bridge to Jerome's Addition. The chief of police was authorized to buy all necessary plank to repair sidewalks and crossings. One sidewalk petition was received and referred to the proper committee. Adjourned.

Commercial School!

Prof. A. A. Cameron, the celebrated lecturer and teacher of book-keeping, penmanship, forms, &c., &c., is here for the purpose of organizing a commercial night school, which he proposes to do as soon as the present excitement subsides. He will give a free public lecture in Ericsson's Hall, probably on Monday evening next, which will be duly announced in his circulars. Mr. Cameron's course of instruction is designed for book-keepers, business men, clerks, young men and ladies. He is spoken of in the highest terms by his students and the press everywhere he has lectured and taught. He is evidently a gentleman of more than ordinary talent and a thorough master of his profession. Now is the time for our citizens to seize this golden opportunity to acquire a thorough, practical business education. You should not fail to hear him and judge for yourself.

That Incubator.

Several weeks since we noted that J. T. Reed was experimenting with a home made incubator. His first trial did not prove a success but he filled up the "old hen" again and started the fires anew. He set 65 eggs and has now 80 bright, lively chickens who don't know anything about the left-handed manner in which they came into being any more'n same as it was a truly hen what did the business. During the last trial the steam chest got to leaking which obliged the removal of all of the eggs, which doubtless caused the mischief. He will at once load up his old hen and try 'er another whack. Mr. Reed has never had any experience in this business, never saw such a "hen" until he made it himself, and it is not to be wondered at if he don't get the hang of it all of a sudden like, but he has genius, pluck and perseverence, and we predict that he will make a grand success of the business. He certainly deserves abundant success. We shall watch this "old hen" with interest until Mr. Reed has solved the problem definitely one way or the other, and we hope for his sake that his labors will be crowned with abundant success.

SEPARATION.

A wall was grown up between the two—
A strong, thick wall, though all unseen;
None knew when the first stones were laid,
Nor how the wall was built, I ween.

And so their lives were wide apart,
Although they shared one board, one bed;
A careless eye saw naught amiss,
Yet each was to the other dead.

He, much absorbed in work and gain,
Grew soon unmindful of his loss;
A hard indifference worse than hate,
Changed love's pure gold to worthless dross.

She suffered tortures all untold;
Too proud to mourn, too strong to die;
The wall pressed heavily on her heart;
Her white face showed her misery.

Such walls are growing day by day
'Twixt man and wife, 'twixt friend and friend—
Would they could know, who lightly build,
How sad and bitter is the end.

A careless word, an unkind thought,
A slight neglect, a taunting tone—
Such things as these, before we know,
Have laid the wall's foundation stone.

ON SHIPBOARD.

"Well—perhaps—some time." The words fall slowly and falteringly from a pair of beautiful spirited lips.

"Some time."

With emphasis proportioned to the negative character of the hesitating consent, comes the echo—"Sometime!" And Dacre Farleighstone's whole attitude bespeaks of despair. "Some time! Only that! Why, some time we shall all die and our bodies shall be given up to the worms. Some time we shall—if we are so unfortunate as to live long enough—grow hoary-headed and become the victims of gout and dyspepsia. You might as well say never, Dolly."

"Well, then, make it never," says Dolly, pretending to pout.

"Do you really mean that?" asks Dacre, in a tone of tragic despair; because, if you do——"

"I think you are just as mean as you can be!" exclaims Miss Dolly, interrupting him, and springing to her feet in a decided manner, "to make up a quarrel out of nothing." Here the young lady comes to a sudden stop. Her witching eyes are fixed upon the face before her, and the dismay depicted thereon is too much for her, despite her determination to appear seriously indignant.

She bursts into hearty laughter.

"One would think, to see your face, that you were going straight to your execution," she cries.

"And if I were, it would still be sport for you, I suppose?" murmurs this crushed young man, turning away with an air of resigned melancholy.

The scene of this dialogue is on board an ocean steamer, bound for Liverpool.

They are on that portion of the deck which seems particularly adapted for stolen tete-a-tetes, at the stern end of the vessel, their seats being protected by the state-rooms.

The wind is gradually rising, however, and it is no easy matter to preserve dignity amidst the noise of the roar and creaking, and the dishevelment of attire consequent upon its furious attacks. Dolly has to raise her voice in order to make her lover hear, and as she turns, on her way to the cabin, she shows herself a very poor sailor. The rolling of the ship and the wind together make her stagger backward, gasping for breath. The creamy shawl, the corner of which has served as a hood for her hair, is blown out like a balloon, and in her frantic efforts to secure it, Dolly stumbles against her lover, who hesitates not to make the most of this opportunity, and throwing his arms about her, draws her back into shelter.

"Tell me, Dolly, do you mean it?" he whispers, his cheek close to hers.

"Mean what?" asked Dolly, in malicious innocence.

"Why, you know—that you intend to keep me waiting forever and ever before you will marry me."

"I don't say so," says Dolly, a preverse twinkle still lingering in her eye, though her cheeks have deepened from wild-rose pink to the hue of a crimson queen-rose. "Please let me go," with a delicious pout and downward fall of pearly, brown-fringed eyelids.

"I shall not," cries the determined young man following up his advantage, "until you promise me that when we both go to America next fall you will marry me one month after our arrival."

"I shall not promise you anything, sir," cries Dolly, really becoming wroth, until you let me go."

"Then kiss me, and I will," says Dacre.

A rebellious smile conquers the seriousness of the small rosy face; an uncontrolable smile which shows this audacious youth that he has come off victor. He has not besieged the citadel of fair Miss Thornburn's heart in vain.

A stolen upward glance from Dolly, and that first kiss for which he had longed, but has never ventured to take, is his.

After which Dolly makes a wild dash away from him.

"One moment, darling—just one!" cries Dacre.

"Oh, please—Dacre—I mean yes, yes, I will promise. Only you must give me one year. One year from to-day I will——"

"Marry me?"

"Yes. Now, please——"

And after Dacre has stolen another kiss, he suddenly finds himself alone. Nor does Miss Dolly make herself visible again that day.

While her fiance wanders about, by turns important and happy, and restless and miserable.

* * * * * * *

It is night—deep, dark midnight, unlit by moon or stars, tumultuous with high wind and rain.

The vessel is due in port on the early morrow, yet these winds which have been her annoyance since she left New York have made her three days extra labor before she will arrive at her destination.

The captain laughs tonight with his social passengers, yet goes to his stateroom and looks anxious.

The hours wear on, and when all are sleeping their soundest, there comes a crunch—a heavy lurch, and the passengers are thrown out of their berths. They flock on deck, to be lashed with rain and breaking sea. They see faint lights on the shore.

"Are they making an attempt to land in this sea?" they ask.

"No. We are stranded. The lights are on—head shoals——"

The signal-guns are sounding—the signal station men have responded, and all wait in shivering suspense the arrival of life-boats. Every moment the vessel is rocking, plunging, crunching like a maddening thing; any minute may come the crash that will end all!

With wild screams of delight they welcome the lunging life-boat. Above the noise may be heard the "hoy-hoy" of her men, and the work of lowering women and children begins.

Dolly—little Dolly—sees them lower her mother and sister. Dacre is standing by her side, white and stern. She throws her arms about his neck in farewell. Tears and sobs choke her speech. "Oh, Dacre, if the life-boat does not return in time, I shall never never see you again. And you are so good—remember I shall always—"

A rough hand is laid upon her arm. She, too, must now go.

For one instant Dacre holds her in a clasp from which no hands can tear her.

Some one is lowered in her place; then Dacre pushes her forward quickly.

May not another instant see her dashed into the sea.

This acquaintance, this friendship, this love begun ten days ago on shipboard, has it lived its life, and is this the end?

Away goes the life-boat, and still the vessel rages on, and still there are women left to wring their hands with horror at what seems now certain death.

But again the life-boat comes before the sturdy ship yields to her furious opponent, and again it puts off, leaving the few stout hearts behind who had longest waited.

No boat will survive the storm, yet quick wit and skill have strung together a raft, and when the life-boat leaves them, the crew and remaining passengers lash themselves to this. Dacre Farleighstone is among them.

At last the break comes, and an hour later, when the dull, leaden day slowly, surlily dawns upon the scene, the wreck is no longer within range of their vision, but ten drenched human beings are floating along in the deep sweep of ugly water. The wind has at last abated, but the rain still pours down. Around them a vast nothing, unbroken by line of shore or gleam of sail.

Will they, ere long, also become—nothing?

* * * * * * *

Within a cheerful, fire-lit drawing-room, Mrs. Thornburn is seated with her two daughters.

It is eight months since their visit to Europe, and they are once more comfortably established for their winter season in New York.

Poor Dolly's tender parting with her lover had been the first intimation which her mother had received of any attachment between the two. Consequently, Dolly had not escaped a vigilant surveillance thenceforth, notwithstanding the fact that Dacre is reported among the missing; the mother, evidently, would never trust Dolly out of her sight more.

A downright scolding Dolly had received, but, owing to her evident ill-health, "as a consequence of their mishap," the mother said, she was spared further reference to the subject.

"I shall marry her as soon as possible," said the mother, in confidence, to her elder sister. "One is never safe with such a girl on one's hands."

Consequently two or three rich bachelors had "been thrust at her," as Dolly expressed herself to her bosom friend, Jessie; "and," Dolly would add, in the midst of her sobs, "all ugly as they can be! And Dacre was so handsome! and now, poor boy, I shall never, never see him again! Mamma thought he was too young and too poor, because he had only his salary; but he was then on business for the large firm with which he was connected, and he told me had he the prospect of rapid advancement. And now that he has gone I shall never, never marry. Think how little I would seem to value his memory to turn about and marry the first ugly rich man I met!"

So Mrs. Thornburn found more difficulty with her daughter that winter than she had anticipated.

She would go to no parties. She would see no gentlemen.

"It is Mr. Haddon, called for the third time this week," said Mrs. Thornburn, glancing at a card handed her by a waiter. "I told him once you were out, and again you were ill, but urged him to call again, and I insist upon your seeing him, Dolly."

"There is only one way you can make me see him," cries Dolly, springing to her feet in anger, "and that is to drag me in struggling in your arms."

Having exploded which outrageous speech, Dolly leaves the room, her mother standing helplessly aghast.

Presently Miss Dolly may be seen making her way to the house of her friend, Jess Holmes, into whose responsive bosom she pours forth the burden of her woes. She remains to dinner, much preferring the society there to that of her mother in her present mood. For there is always Jessie's brother Jack, a young man possessed of fine spirits, whom Dolly likes next best to her lost lover and Jessie.

He is late tonight, and when at last he arrives, he brings with him—a handsome, tall, bearded fellow, whom he immediately proceeds to introduce to the girls, when he is interrupted by a slight scream from their fair guest. She grows pale, then red, and but for the action of this stranger, she would have lain prone upon the floor in a swoon.

He hears the one word, "Dacre!" uttered in such a voice, he sees the face best beloved on earth, and the next instant he holds the frightened girl in his arms.

Before the astonished household he kisses his little love back to consciousness, and Jessie knows it is the lost Dacre returned. The sea has given up its dead.

He had but just arrived, and meeting his old friend Jack Holmes (to whom, of course, Dolly's confidence had never extended,) he had accepted his invitation to dinner, little dreaming whom he should meet there.

The crew and the passengers on the raft had been picked up by a steamer going some roundabout way to Spain, and after much delay Dacre had succeeded in reaching London. There he was obliged to remain until his business left him free to return to America. He had never secured Dolly's city address, and therefore could not write, but had hoped to discover her abode [illegible] think more of wealth than young and tender hearts.

When Dolly left her friend's house that night, she left it under the protection of her fiance, and at twelve o'clock, when Mrs. Thornburn is railing at that "outrageous girl" (for she guesses that Dolly is spending the night with Jessie—had she not done it before?) she receives a note from a messenger.

It runs as follows:

"I am married, and we are now started on the road to Niagara. I mean Dacre and I—for he was saved, and came back yesterday.

DOLLY.

And what is left for mamma now to do?

She can but fold her hands and murmur:

"Married! Without even a decent wedding or trousseau!"

'I AM DYING EGYPT, DYING.'

How the Author of "The Death of Antony" Died.

St. Louis Republican.

"Talk about strikes and mobs and mutineers," said Gen. Warren P. Edgarton recently when the strikers were being discussed, "the man to deal with a mob was Napoleon Bonaparte. His order was load with canister and fire low. William H. Lytle, the author of the poem, 'The Death of Antony' that begins, 'I am dying Egypt, dying,' was the man for mutineers. At one time during the war I was sent under his command with several pieces of light artillery, among them two or three howitzers, in a brigade that went out on a raid some place near Shelbyville, in Tennessee. When we started out the wagons were used to carry the soldiers knapsacks, etc., and when we had gathered together what forage we wanted the wagons had to be used to carry it. Of course the soldiers then had to carry their baggage, and when the order was given to do this, one regiment refused to obey, and said they would not touch their knapsacks. Col. Lytle marched the men over to where the knapsacks were and again ordered the men to take them up. Again they refused. I was stationed on a little eminence a short distance away, and presently here came Col. Lytle galloping over to me with his sabre out and his eyes flashing.

"'Capt. Edgarton,' said he, 'will you let me have those howitzers?'

"'Certainly,' I answered, and gave the order for the guns to move. Coming over right in front of the mutineers, Col. Lytle gave the order, 'Attention! Load with cannister,' 'Take aim—and then in an undertone, bidding the gunners await in readiness the word fire, spoke to the mutineers saying, 'You—— —— —— ——take up your knapsacks or by God I'll wipe you off the face of the earth.' Not a man in the regiment moved, and Lytle waited fully a minute. 'Now, d—n you,' said Lytle, 'I'll give you one minute to pick up those knapsacks. Slowly, first one and then another, and then a third picked up his knapsack and before the minute was up there was not a piece of baggage on the ground.

"Lytle was a charming fellow. Brave as a lion and tender-hearted as a woman. He was unlucky in the matter of being wounded—seldom leaving an engagement without a wound more or less serious. At Carnefar ferry in Virginia he was shot in the leg. At Perryville a spent bullet struck him just in front of his ear, and ranging downward lodged in his cheek. He was unconscious as soon as struck, and seeing the blood coming from his temple his men supposed he was dead and left him on the field, together with most of his command. He was taken prisioner there and the next day sent through the lines on parole. When he learned how many of his men had been killed he cried like a child and bewailed the fate that he had not been among the killed. That same day he was exchanged and went to fighting again. His ill-luck followed him and he was killed at Chickamauga."

Fruits as Food and Medicine.

Of all the fruits with which we are blessed, the peach is the most delicious and digestible. There is nothing more palatable, wholesome and medicinal than good ripe peaches. They should be ripe, but not over-ripe and half-rotten; and of this kind they may make a part of either meal, or be eaten between meals; but it is better to make them a part of the regular meals. It is a mistaken idea that no fruit should be eaten at breakfast. It would be far better if our people would eat less bacon and grease at breakfast, and more fruit. In the morning there is an acrid state of the secretions, and nothing is so well calculated to correct this as cooling sub-acid fruits, such as peaches, apples, etc. Still, most of us have been taught that eating fruit before breakfast is highly dangerous. How the idea originated I do not know, but it is certainly a great error, contrary to both reason and facts. The apple is one of the best of fruits. Baked or stewed apples will generally agree with the most delicate stomach, and are an excellent medicine in many cases of sickness. Green or half-ripe apples stewed and sweetened are pleasant to the taste, cooling, nourishing and laxative, far superior, in many cases, to the abominable doses of salts and oil usually given in fever and other diseases. Raw apples and dried apples stewed are better for constipation than liver pills. Oranges are very acceptable to most stomachs, having all the advantages of the acid alluded to; but the orange juice alone should be taken, rejecting the pulp. The same may be said of lemons, pomegranates and all that class. Lemonade is the best drink in fevers, and when thickened with sugar is better than syrup of squills and other nauseants in many cases of cough. Tomatoes act on the liver and bowels, and are much more pleasant and safe than blue mass and "liver-regulators." The juice should be used alone, rejecting the skins. The small-seeded fruits, such as blackberries, figs, raspberries, currants and strawberries, may be classed among the best foods and medicines. The sugar in them is nutritious, the acid is cooling and purifying, and the seeds are laxative. We would be much the gainers if we would look more to our orchards and gardens for our medicines, and less to our drug stores. To cure fever, or act on the kidneys, no febrifuge or diuretic is superior to watermelon, which may, with very few exceptions, be taken in sickness and health in almost unlimited quantities, not only without injury, but with positive benefit. But in using them, the water, or juice, should be [illegible]—Hall's Journal of Health.

Miscellaneous Gleanings.

The value of opium imported as medicine last year was $661,044, and for smoking purposes $10,124. In 1883, the value of opium for smoking was $2,684,589, this large quantity having been hurried in in the early months of the year so as not to subject it to the increased duty of $4. The average value of opium used in the United States by the Chinese or others, in their death-dealing pipes, seems to be at first cost $800,000 a year. When used to cater to human vice, $2,500,000 would be a figure within the limit.

Pennsylvania has a state tax on watches, the result of which, as reported by the Secretary of Internal Affairs, are amusing. The population of the state is about 4,500,000. The number of voters last November was 900,000. But in all this population and this army of voters there were only 45,596 watches, gold, silver and "common." So it would appear that there were last year 4,454,404 Pennsylvanians, not one of which had a watch.

The truth is, says the Salem Gazette, in spite of the marvelous progress that has been made in the gathering up and prompt serving of news, the business is very much overdone, and we are often led to doubt whether the mental training of the mass of people is as good as it was half a century ago, when there was less matter to read and far more careful reading and digesting of what there was. It is doubtful if the general run of people "salt down," in their heads, as comprehensive and genuine a knowledge of public affairs as they did then.

In the examination at Cleveland, before United States Commissioner White of Dr. T. H. Bingham, of Lyndale, accused of passing counterfeit nickels, the prisoner confessed his guilt, and said he was forced to do it to keep his wife and children from starving. He was too proud to beg, and presented a most touching picture of his sick wife and child asking for food. Bingham said he could not find enough to do at his practice to support him. He was held for trial and his family will be taken care of by charitable people in Cleveland.

In Dr. Beard's book on "American Nervousness, its Causes and Consequences," he said that the replies to a large number of circulars sent to schools was enough to show clearly that "nearly everything about the conduct of the schools was wrong, unphysiological and unpsychological, and that they were conducted so as to make very sad and sorrowing the lives of those who were forced to attend them."

At Des Moines the Irish State League closed. Resolutions were adopted indorsing and reaffirming the platform of the National League; also indorsing Parnell and his party; approving the renewal of the study of the Irish language; affirming loyalty to republican institutions; in favor of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting ownership of land in fee simple by any but American citizens. Over $2,000 was raised as a working fund. Council Bluffs was selected for the next meeting; M. V. Gannon, of Davenport, was

Mr. E. R. Hoyt, a mechanical engineer at the New Orleans Exposition, was severely injured by a huge derrick pole falling on his foot. He was conveyed to his residence and after only three applications of St. Jacob's Oil, all the swelling and pain disappeared, and he resumed his duties.

The following are the exact salaries paid by the present management of the Paris Grand Opera to the eight principal performers: Madame Krauss 180,000 francs ($36,000) per annum, Mlle. Ada Isaacs 96,000 francs, Mlle. Richard 78,000 francs, Mlle. Dufrane 52,800 francs, M. Lassalle 162,000 francs, M. Solomon 78,000 francs, Sellier and Bondouresque each 78,000 francs.

A romantic scribe thus describes the first kiss of a newly-wedded couple: "Up the perfume swept avenue of love and under the roseate archway of Hymen they had passed into the joy-lit realms of that higher and holier existence where soul meets soul on limpid waves of ecstatic feeling, and hearts touch hearts through the blended channel of lips in rapture linked." Gosh!

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher said, in response to one of his cranky people, who is opposed to roller skating: These places are said to be immoral, are they? Well, the same was said of our old New England singing schools, which also brought our young people together. However, I think too highly of our American young men and girls to believe that they would misbehave themselves in being brought in contact; of, course, allowing for the usual discount of wrong doers.

Life in the Paris Sewers
is possible, for a short time to the robust, but the majority of refined persons would prefer immediate death to existence in their reeking atmosphere. How much more revolting to be in one's self a living sewer. But this is actually the case with those in whom the inactivity of the liver drives the refuse matter of the body to escape through the lungs, breath, the pores, kidneys and bladder. It is astonishing that life remains in such a dwelling. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" restores normal purity to the system and renews the whole being.

A Popular Fallacy.
Many people think that Rheumatism cannot be cured. It is caused by a bad state of the blood which deposits poisonous matter in the joints and muscles causing lameness, stiffness and swelling of the joints and excruciating pains. Kidney-Wort will certainly effect a cure. It acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, stimulating them to a healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood and eliminates the poison from the system. Go to the nearest druggist, buy Kidney-Wort and be cured. [illegible]

Cough, Cold, Croup.
CONSUMPTION AND REMEDY.

Of all the multitude of fearful ills that prey upon and destroy the human race, consumption stands out with distinctive prominence as the most alarming. A cold at first, then a neglected cough, leads to the development of this scourge of mankind. One remedy that has survived the test of trial is Allen's Lung Balsam. Compounded from the purest ingredients and free from all combinations of opium. For coughs, colds, croup, bronchitis and all other affections of the throat and lungs it stands unrivaled. It approaches so nearly a specific, that with the common sense directions around each bottle strictly complied with, ninety-five per cent. of consumptive cases are permanently cured by this invaluable remedy. The safety of every family would be consulted by keeping a bottle of Allen's Lung Balsam in the house, and have it ready for use when coughs, colds and croup make their unwelcome intrusion.

WHOOPING COUGH CURED.
O. A. HARRIS, of Benevolence, Ga., writes, Dec. 13, 1884: "My little boy, but little more than a year old, had a severe attack of WHOOPING COUGH, which my family physician said could not be cured, as it was winter. Having heard of the merits of ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, I immediately proceeded to town and purchased a bottle. To my surprise, this one bottle cured him sound and well. Others, hearing of the result, tried it, with equally good results. Later, my two little girls had Whooping Cough, and one bottle cured both of them. We think Whooping Cough is not much to be dreaded, if ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM can be had and given."

Had the Number Craze.

Two railroad men were talking over old times. Inquiry was made as to what had become of an old freight brakeman named Jack Taylor.

"Didn't ye hear about Jack? No? I thought everybody knew what he come to. Poor old Jack—he'll never twist another brake or swing another lamp."

"Dead?"

"No, but he might as well be. You see Jack got the number craze. He got 'em bad, too, and——"

"The what?"

"The number craze. You don't know what that is? You eastern railroaders don't seem to know much of anything. Well, Jack got 'em, his being the third case I ever heard of. Seven or eight years ago they took holt of Jack, and they kept growin' worse. In 1883, I believe it was, he started out to find the number of the year. 'Long about the middle of the summer he found it. Then he was happy. But New Year's day he started out hunting for 1884. He looked all summer and all fall. Finally cold weather came, and would you believe it, Jack would sit out on the top of the cars in the freezingest weather looking for a car numbered 1884. Whenever we passed a side-track he'd look at the cars like a wild man. He got so crazy over it that he mighty near lost his job. Christmas day he found his car loaded with Hops and Malt Bitters bound for St. Paul and Minneapolis billed to Noyes Bros. & Culter, Merell & Ryan and Ryman Eliel, Drug Co. By the way, Jack's taking those bitters now and thinks he will be all right again this spring. He says it is the best blood purifier he ever heard of."

"Is that so? Guess I'll try it. Good-bye, Bill."

"So long, Mike. Will see you at the switch."

Twenty-Five Per Cent Stronger Than Any Other Butter Color.

BURLINGTON, VT., May 2d, 1882.

I hereby certify that I have examined the Butter Color prepared by Wells, Richardson & Co., and that the same is free from alkali or any other substance injurious to health; that I have compared it with some of the best of the other Butter Colors in the market and find it to be more than twenty-five per cent. stronger in color than the best of the others.

I am satisfied that it is not liable to become rancid or in any way to injure the Butter. I have examined it after two months free exposure to the air in a place liable to large changes of temperature, and found no trace of rancidity, while other kinds similarly exposed became rancid.

PINKEYE.
A Remarkable Cure of a Horse.
In the fall of 1883 I had a valuable horse taken with the pinkeye, resulting in blood poison. After nine months of doctoring with all the remedies to be found in horse books, I despaired of a cure. His right hind leg was as large as a man's body, and had on it over forty running sores. He was a most pitiable looking object. At last I thought of Swift's Specific, and commenced to use it. I used fifteen bottles. In August last all symptoms of the disease disappeared. There have been no signs of a return, and the horse has done a mule's work on my farm ever since.

MY LADY IN THE SOUTH.

My ladydwells in sunny lands,
She walks by tropic seas;
I know where her fair palace stands—
Amid the orange trees.

The fervid-hearted passion flower
Blooms in her garden cover;
The orchid blazes by her bower,
The palm trees wave above her.

The sky that greets her upward view
In one vast sun-lit dome,
Is like that orb's cerulean hue
In Gesu's church at Rome.

And when day's glories slowly die,
And wild birds sing no more,
The southern cross then blazes high—
The clouds Magellan saw.

Some day when hills are growing dark,
And when I long for rest,
I'll step aboard my little bark
And steer her toward the west.

And seek my lady in the land
Where summer dies no more.
And when I reach that tropic strand
My wand'rings will be o'er.

And yet I know when cold, dark seas
Break on a wintry strand;
When snowy fields and leafless trees
Are over all the land;

I know that were she with me now,
However cold and drear
The winter's wind blew o'er my brow,
She'd make a summer here.

—Irving King.

A SWEET APOLOGY.

"I wish you would'nt fidget so, Harry. How do you expect we can get the pictures arranged when you joggle the table in that outrageous manner?"

"Well, I'm sure, Nell," answered the accused, deprecatingly, "it's rather rough on a fellow to be compelled to sit the best part of an evening handing the paste pot and sorting fancy cards. I thought you had outgrown that sort of thing when you put away your school books."

"That shows all you know," was the contemptuous rejoinder. "As if these albums were not all the rage, and Alice, so good and thoughtful, bringing all the newest and loveliest cards from Paris. Why, my dear boy (this in a triumphant tone,) my book will be a long way the most beautiful one in town."

"Yes, I know," muttered the young man, with a reprehensible lack of interest. "But you promised to let me row you across Silver Lake this evening. The moonlight nights are nearly gone and we haven't settled anything yet, Nellie."

"Can't you talk before Alice? I'm sure we needn't mind her."

Here I, being the Alice referred to, hastily rose and offered to resign my position as "paster-in-chief."

"No, no," Nell exclaimed.

"I'm going to get some more paste," I answered.

"Why don't you use mucilage?" queried Harry, in a conciliatory tone, resigning himself to the inevitable.

"Because we haven't any, and they are out of it at the stationer's, so we thought a little home-made material would do as well."

"Oh, no, it won't," ejaculated Harry, with alacrity. "I wouldn't do any more just now. It would be far better to wait and finish your work with the proper stuff. Come (this very pleadingly), a little row will do you good, and Miss Alice will perhaps join us," continued our hero, with a suspicious lack of warmth.

Gracefully declining the invitation, I watched the young lovers slowly treading Miller's lane.

"About an hour had elapsed, and I was comfortably doing my hair preparatory to seeking my downy couch, when Nell rushed in my room with blazing eyes and heightened color, and flinging herself on a chair, exclaimed, "Harry and I have had such a row."

"Indeed," I replied, unmoved by a statement whose recurrence could be estimated as happening about once every twenty-four hours.

"Yes," said Nell, somewhat crushed by my lack of sympathy, "and, Allie, it was all about a miserable box of bonbons which Fred. Clarke, that clever young lawyer, brought me from the city. Harry said he wished I would get over my childish love of sweets, that it was ruinous to the digestion, to say nothing of my lovely teeth. I told him he only made my life an excuse, that the truth of the matter was jealousy. Jealousy about poor Fred., and he needn't think because he had just taken his doctor's diploma that he could commence practice with me as his first patient. Well you can readily understand, dear, how one word led to another, but when Harry wound up in his conceited way by declaring medicine to be a noble profession and law a despicable one, I tell you I couldn't stand it, and I informed His Highness that I would never speak to him again unless he made me an apology, and what do you think? The wretch laughed and walked off, saying: 'Oh, certainly, Miss Nicolls, I'll make a sweet apology,'" and with a burst of tears sweet Nell, who after all was little more than a child, relapsed into despair on a macrame tidy, thereby reducing the red ribbons to irredeemable dampness. I, with my five years' seniority, hardly knew what consolation would prove most efficacious in soothing indignant seventeen.

It was useless to indicate that it was a mere boy and girl spat about a stick of candy, or that it was quite proper for an incipient physician to object to an undue indulgence in sweets, or to hint at the flattery which is always conveyed by the demon of jealousy.

All these suggestions were received with scorn, from the indisputable fact that Harry had made himself disagreeable "from the first," objecting to the harmless amusement of "making an album," giving vent to sarcasms regarding the pictures, the paste and various other things connected with the artistic employment.

"Nell! Nell!" yelled the musical Tommy, as my cousin's brother was called. "Here's a package for you."

We were most comfortably disposed on an old shawl, with books and work, in the grove, just to the left of the old fashioned farmhouse.

No reference had been made to the last night, but my Nell had lost that buoyancy of spirits which rendered us all her willing subjects. Full of curiosity we awaited the coming of the dreadful boy, who burst upon us breathless but grinning, bearing aloft a heavy parcel about the size of a large cocoanut.

He dropped it into her lap and gasped: "With Harry Blessing's compliments. The colored man brought it, and he said there was no answer. Hurry up, let's see what it is. I'll open it. I'll cut the string. Here's a knife," volunteered the voluble and obliging Tommy.

The removal of sundry rolls of the thick brown paper disclosed to our gaze a round glass jar, securely sealed, filled with some thick, golden fluid.

"What can it be we exclaimed simultaneously.

"What a lovely color," added Nell. "There is no label on it. I wonder what—" she paused and turned the pretty jar slowly round and round.

"Why, you two gooses," politely remarked Tom, "why, it's honey—strained honey. Old man Blessing is crazy about bees, and your beau knows how 'gone' you are on sweets, and of course he'd be sure to send you some of his first crop."

"But isn't it a little early in the season for honey, Tom?" I ventured.

"Early! Of course not. Why, I see'd a whole row of jars just like them in Killer's grocery yesterday."

This decided all doubt on the matter, and with a happy laugh and brimming over with importance, Nell dispatched Tom to ask auntie if we might have hot biscuits for tea, "and Tommy, dear," added our heroine insinuatingly, "you'll run over to Willow Farm, won't you, with a note, and I'll finish your reins before you get back?"

"All right; see that you do," was the patronizing response, as he rushed off to execute his mission. As soon as he was well out of sight and sound, Nell exclaimed: "Why, Alice, don't you see? Why, it's as clear as day. Poor Harry? how clever of him."

Perceiving that I did not comprehend, she continued: "Don't you remember how provoked I was because Harry declared emphatically that of course he would make me an apology—'a sweet apology'—and—here it is"—holding it up against the sunlight, triumphantly. "I shall send him a dear little note, say the apology is accepted, and ask him to tea," and, clasping the sweet treasure in both small hands, she hastened to the house, and lost no time in penning a few words which would pardon and recall the erring one. Aunt Mary gave us carte blanche, and much delight was expressed at the prospect of light biscuits, fresh butter and golden honey.

Prompt to the moment came the repentant swain. Greeted with smiles was he by a lovely little maiden, dressed in an exquisitely fitting pale blue cashmere robe, particularly becoming to my fair cousin.

Not a word was said in reference to the past.

As for Harry, he looked a picture of puzzled delight at his love's magnanimity. We seated ourselves about Aunt Mary's bountiful board, and after each had been served with cold chicken, jelly and light snowy biscuits, almost too hot to touch, conversation began.

"Nellie, what in the world have you got that thing there for?" inquired Mr. Blessing, indicating the jar.

"Just wait and you will see," nodded our pretty hostess, as with dexterous fingers she quickly loosened the top. At this moment I noticed a peculiar smile pass over Mr. Blessing's countenance.

Expectant Tommy, who could no longer restrain his feelings, demanded liberal and immediate distribution.

"Tom, keep quiet!" cried Nell, "It's my turn first."

"Of course, that's only fair," echoed the chorus at the table.

"But hadn't you better wait till—"

"I don't see the reason why," stammered the bewildered Harry.

The chorus united in a full cry of "Oh, hush!" "That'll do!" "Give us some!" etc., etc., until our friend Harry was rendered quite audible.

Nell poured a generous quantity of honey over her deliciously buttered biscuit.

"Ah!" murmured she, raising it to her lips.

"Ah!" echoed the sympathetic chorus. The lovely mouth closed quickly over a goodly bite.

"Nell!" shrieked Harry, "what are you doing!" and grasping her arm he sprang from his chair, overturning the jar and ruining the blue cashmere forever.

My cousin covered her face with a napkin and fled from the room. I followed her. Mr. Blessing did not wait further developments. Tom rolled on the floor in an ecstasy of merriment, while poor Aunt Mary and Uncle James were left solitary and surprised at the tea table.

It is necessary to tell our readers how vainly poor Harry tried to explain that in the humility of his spirit he had purchased a large jar of the very finest liquid glue at Killer's grocery, and how he contemplated helping with heart and hand to complete the album which had occasioned so much disturbance. He had brought a charming collection of peace offerings, and was naturally confused to find his mucillage placed upon the supper table?

I am sure you will readily see that nothing short of unceasing devotion to fancy picture albums, albums large and small, of all sorts and shapes and sizes, together with a collection of character cards from all corners of the civilized world, and, in addition, an humble submission to the inevitable in the form of cream-chocolate bon-bons—then, and not till then, did our fair Nell accept a "a sweet apology."—Sunday Mercury.

He Succeeded Too Well.

"Now," said the bride, "Henry, I want you to understand distinctly that I do not wish to be taken for a bride. I am going to behave exactly as if I were an old married woman. So, dearest, do not think me cold and unloving if I treat you very practically when there is anybody by."

"I don't believe I can pass for an old married man. I am so fond of you that I am bound to show it. I am sure to give the snap away."

"No, you mustn't. It's easy enough. And I insist that you behave just like all old married men do. Do you hear?"

"Well, darling, I'll try, but know I will not succeed."

The first evening of their arrival the bride retired to her chamber and the groom fell in with a poker party, with whom he sat playing cards until 4 o'clock in the morning. His wife spent the weary hours weeping. At last he turned up and met his grief-stricken bride with the hilarious question:

"Well, ain't I doing the old married man like a daisy?"

She never referred to the subject again and everybody knew, after that that they had just been married.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Singular Accident.

A report comes from Chico of a mother who was sewing upon her machine, while her son, a lad of 8, was playing with his toys near by. Suddenly the machine needle snapped and the mother stopped and replaced it with another. Presently she glanced toward the child and saw blood trickling down his neck. Upon going to him he was found to be dead. It seems the broken part of the needle flew with such force as to enter the child's medulla oblongata, and he had died without a motion or a sound.—San Francisco Call.

A LUCKY LEGACY.

Young Tom Collins, a law student, has just come into a strange inheritance. He sat solitary in his little boarding house room trying to realize.

"If the poor child hadn't me," he said to himself, "it could go and apply for admission to some institution. If I hadn't it, I could—pshaw! that is not the idea, I must decide what I am to do."

Tom had solemnly promised to care for the new-born babe of his only sister who had just died.

Tom was interrupted by a knock on the door. It was followed by a cry of mingled entreaty and command, such as only hungry babes know how to emit.

"I've fetched the poor little dear around, sir," said the nurse, brandishing her charge. "There! there! there! It's got the wind this minute, mixin' milk. Have you found a nurse, sir? And baby wants clothes."

She dropped her shrieking charge upon Tom's bed and started toward the door.

"Oh! oh!" gasped Tom. "Do not go. In the name of mercy, do not! Why do you say I want a nurse? Are you not one?"

"I am, sir," she said, turning confidentially to Tom, "'a monthly.' I am willing to stay with you while I can. But, sir, my summons may come any day or hour. It is impossible to calculate. I'll work for you while I can, sir, but when my call comes no earthly thing can keep me."

"Can you," said Tom, looking gloomily at his now silent prize on the bed, "can you give me any advice?"

Mrs. Primmins placed her arms akimbo.

Tom fervently prayed for light on the meditations.

"I have it," cried Mrs. Primmins. "Malviny's got to take it!"

"Bless your dear soul!" responded Tom. Malvina's the very one! What a talent you have for managing, auntie dear."

There was Tom, his very self! He had hit on exactly the right compliment to pay the nurse. He was actually floating through life on this instinct he had for saying the most pleasant thing to everybody. Mrs. Primmins of all things desired the reputation of a manœuverer, as it was, of course, the one of all others she did not deserve.

"Yes," she cried, chuckling, "I can manage. Let me alone! And the first thing in the morning I'll go there with you. Now," said she, seizing her charge, who was beginning to squirm, "now I'll see what's to be got out of your landlady."

Winking violently with first one eye and then the other, she started to go; then, with a sudden solemnity, she reinserted her head in the door-way."

"If I'm summoned," she said, "it's above all else. If I'm called, I must go day or night."

"Certainly," said Tom, much puzzled, "but you won't be, aunty!" As the young man walked abroad to get his dinner he felt impressed with an almost mysterious awe of the old nurse.

"To think of living always with death grinning one in the face like that!" he muttered.

In the night Tom's dream of peace was again dispelled.

Another knock at the door.

"Am I under a ban?" growled Tom; "what's the matter now?"

"I'm called," said the voice of Mrs. Primmins. "My summons has come!"

"Oh, the duce!" cried Tom, lost to all sense of the importance of conciliating the nurse. "Go to bed! Hold on till morning!"

In the morning, Tom, who, happy fellow, always slept soundest under a sense of depression, did not make his appearance until 9 o'clock. He found that Mrs. Primmins had actually disappeared for parts unknown. In the arms of his hitherto stern landlady he found his charge nestling. A new light—that of love—was beaming in the solemn woman's eye—that woman, thought Tom, who could see any of her boarders starve and rot for ten cents saved!

"I have undertaken," said the landlady, giving Tom a smile such as he had never dreamed could rest in her features—"I have undertaken to go with you in search of Mrs. Primmin's niece, Malvina."

Several hours later Tom Collins sprang from a light wagon in which he had driven to the door of a pretty cottage.

"We will make the last effort by inquiring here," he said to his landlady, who held the baby.

With his usual impetuosity he pushed directly through into the rear kitchen. There he forgot his errand—forgot everything except what he saw. A young girl, plump, neat and rosy, stood with round arms bared before a table. She was assiduously occupied in carressing with white hands little lumps of dough into shape.

Suddenly she turned. Such a dimpling smile! Such rosy embarrassment! Tom, great black-haired, jetty giant that he was, thought this little plump blonde an angel. Thought! why, he was sure of it!

After awhile he came to his senses and said:

"I'm looking for one Malvina Barker."

"And that is me," said the rosy lips.

"Then I've brought you a baby," he said abruptly.

A good deal of astonishment can be put into a pair of bright blue eyes without spoiling them—and so there was. Fortunately, at that point the landlady appeared, and so, a moment later did Malvina's mother, called up from the cellar by the voices.

Negotiations were soon completed.

Tom, again in his little room, found it the loneliest, dreariest place he had ever in his life looked upon.

A couple of days later he concluded that it would be inhuman not to go and inquire after his little charge. In an incredibly short time he was seized with the same impression again. Then he went to take the baby, who had not yet learned that the moon is more distant than the door-knob, a box of geographical blocks. Then he went to inquire if it needed pocket money, and he told Malvina that he knew she was not kept awake nights with it, because her eyes were so bright.

After tea the moon came out. Oh, that wicked, shameless moon! Tom by its light told Malvina right out that her eyes were bluer than heaven—her lips sweeter than roses—and all that. O-G—. When they parted Malvina went to her room and cried.

What could a perfect king of a man mean by talking like that to her? Of course he could not mean to marry a little school mistress only home on a vacation?

Tom acted queerly, too, when alone in his room. He took a paper and pencil, and figured and calculated. He made a list of all the little properties he possessed. He added them up and added then down. Then he set down a list of all things he was accustomed to spend money upon that could be dispensed with. Then he brought out a book of economy, where it tells how a man can live cheaper with a frugal wife than he can alone. He was astonished to find that book so intensely interesting!

The next day Tom went again to see the baby. In fact, it had seemed to him as though the afternoon would never come. He had more waiting to do at the cottage, for Malvina's mother received him, and she did not appear. At last his impatience spurred him to ask.

"I don't want you to see her again, young man. I will be frank with you and tell you the truth."

"Oh, Mrs. Baker," cried Tom.

"She's a simple child, sir, and is in danger not to understand that attention from one like you can mean nothing."

"Dear Mrs. Baker, you misunderstand me entirely. I must see her this once. I must, indeed. If she sends me away I will never come again."

Tom conquered. When he explained to Malvina about his small income and consulted with her about its sufficiency, she told him that he ought to be ashamed to waste such heaps of money on one. He should have sent half to the heathen.

Tom's income has thus far held out better than when he was single.

Young man, try it!

THE LOVE LETTER.

Miss Orinthia Brown set down her teacup with an emphasis that made all the china rattle. And little Mrs. Meeker jumped nervously at the sound.

"I never heard anything so ridiculous in all my life," said Miss Brown derisively. "Gilbert Mott in love with Georgia Arlington! Why, she's a mere doll, with big blue eyes and pink cheeks and yellow curls."

"She's very fascinating in her manners," Mrs Meeker ventured to remark.

"Oh, pshaw!" was Miss Orinthia's contemptuous comment. And you really think he's in love with her?"

"Yes, I must say that I think so."

"Ah-h-h" said Orinthia, meaningly. "If I only dared to tell you all!"

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Meeker, eagerly; "what do you mean?"

"Nothing," said Miss Brown, with a nod of her head. "He walked home last night with me—didn't he?"

"Yes, but——"

"He stayed on my side of the room all the time we were decorating the fair rooms with evergreens, didn't he?"

"Yes, but that was because——"

"And—but never mind, never mind!" said Miss Orinthia, mysteriously. "Time will show! Georgia Arlington, indeed—why she's nothing but a child—a mere school girl! I know better!"

"Do tell me, Miss Orinthia," pleaded Mrs. Meeker. "Is he really engaged to you?"

Miss Orinthia pursed up her lips, dropped her eyelids with a manner that was wonderfully eloquent, but she would commit herself no further!

"Let's go up stairs and finish dressing those china dolls for the lucky-bag," said Miss Brown. "We shall get more money out of the lucky-bag than anything else, and we must be sure and have it well furnished!"

While the tea-drinking ceremonial had been going on in the lower part of the mansion of Mrs. Meeker, quite a different chain of circumstances was transpiring above stairs. Mr. Gilbert Mott, who had been inveigled into the stairs of the Ladies Fair, nolens volens, had come early to help in the last preparations, and, walking up to the work-room, had surprised a lovely blue-eyed lassie in the occupation of filling sundry cones of bright-hued paper with sugar-plums and French bon-bons.

Georgia Arlington shook back her sunny curls and blushed like a June rose-bud, as she started up.

"Don't go, Miss Arlington, please!" pleaded Gilbert, himself not embarrassed. But Georgia muttered something about a roll of ribbon which she had forgotten, and fluttered past him ere he could remonstrate further.

Gilbert looked after her, with a whimsical expression of despair on his countenance.

"Now, why does she run away from me like that?" he said to himself. "Probably because she knows it tantalizes me! But I'll be even with her yet—if she won't let me tell her how dearly I love her, I'll write to her!"

And heedless of the neglected piles of cedar-sprigs and princess-pine, yet waiting to be wrought into garlands, he sat down to the table and seizing pen and ink began a passionate billet doux after the following fashion:

"MY OWN PRECIOUS DARLING:—Why are you so cold and cruel to me? Why will you not let me tell you in words what you must so often have read in my eyes—the story of my heart's devotion? For I love you, and have loved you; and shall love you to the world's end, and you must have seen it for yourself during the last few days that we have been working together for the church fair! Yet you will not give me a word or a glance of encouragement!

"Is this right, my ruthless queen of heart's? But I am determined that you shall tell me when we meet again whether I may hope or not! Until then, sweet one, I am half in despair, half hopeful,

"Yours ever and unalterably, G. M."

He had just scribbled off this unstudied effusion when the sound of footsteps on the stairs chased away the soft shadows of his love dream, and he had just time to slip the paper under a leaf of Norway spruce twigs, when Mrs. Meeker and Miss Orinthia Brown entered.

"At work so soon!" cried the latter archly. "Isn't he industrious, Miss Meeker?"

"Yes," said Gilbert, hypocritically, I'm at work already!"

So he was but not exactly for the fair.

He watched nervously for an opportunity to possess himself of the precious sheet of paper, without observation, but Miss Orintria, doubtless prompted thereto by some baleful, evil spirit, hovered around the spruce boughs like a middle aged turtle-dove, and effectually warded off his designs. And presently, he was borne downstairs in the popular current to open some boxes of donations, which had just arrived by parsels delivery.

"I can easily come back and get it when they are busy cackling over the new things," he thought.

But—fit illustration this, of the futility of all human plans—when he came rejoicing back some twenty minutes or so later, the sheet was gone.

Gone, leaving no trace or vestige behind—gone, utterly and entirely!

"I believe there has been some superhuman agency at work!" thought our bewildered hero, as he tumbled over the chaotic contents on the table in vain.

But Mr. Mott was wrong. The agency was exceedingly human—no other, in fact, than mischievous little Billy Arlington, who come up in search of stray prizes for the famous lucky-bag, which had been temporarily delivered into his hands. Cornucopias, pincushions, Rimmel's scent-bags, needle-books he pounced on alike, and perceiving a sheet of pink paper, written, he crumpled it into an old envelope, directed Miss Orinthia A. Brown," which lay beyond.

"What a lark it would be," thought the incorrigible Billy. "Some of the girls'll think they've got a love-letter, and how mad they'll be when they find it ain't nothing but one of Rintley's receipts or crochet patterns."

And away rushed Master Billy, little recking of the mischief he was unwittingly working to the cause of true love.

The evening of the fair came—and the pretty rooms, made still prettier by paper roses and evergreen garlands, were crowded with the brave, the fair, and some that were neither one nor the other. Georgia Arlington, presided at one of the tables, lovely enough to drive half a dozen men distracted, instead of one, and Miss Orinthia, in a rustling, slate-colored silk dress, went about like an autumn leaf in a high wind. The luckybag circulated from hand to hand, carrying, as is the want of these institutions, a little merriment and laughter in its wake. Georgia drew a cigar-case, Mr. Mott became the proprietor of a rag-doll, and Miss Orinthia Brown drew—a letter, addressed to herself.

Gilbert Mott, leaning against the doorway, saw Miss Brown hurrying up to Georgia and displaying her prize with malicious glee; while Georgia colored and bit her lip, and looked ready to cry, and feigned a merry little ripple of laughter, all in one and the same breath.

"Why don't that horrid old maid keep away from Georgia Arlington!" thought our discontented hero. "She looks like a dried up bunch of raisins beside a cluster of Isabella grapes."

And, watching an oppotunity, he slipped through the crowd and edged up to the table where Georgia was selling pin-cushions and tape trimmings at an exorbitant price.

"Georgia!" he whispered, softly. "Georgia!"

But she turned her head haughtily away.

"Please to excuse me, Mr. Mott," she said, coolly.

While Gilbert was staring at her in amazement a hand was slipped through his arm and Miss Orinthia Brown drew him gently away.

"Where are you going?" he demanded following her rather unwillingly.

"Just outside the door, one moment," whispered Miss Orinthia, falteringly. "It is not in the tumult of a common crowd that such words should be spoken!"

"What words? I haven't an idea what you mean!" cried the young man.

Orinthia drew him into the hall, her, head dropped on his shoulder.

"Yes," she faltered, "yes! How could you for a moment doubt it!"

"Doubt what? Excuse me Miss Brown, but I think your wits are forsaking you," said Gilbert Mott, striving to extricate himself from the damsel's grasp.

"Gilbert, would you, then, be false to me?" sobbed Orinthia, with the dawning symptoms of hysterics.

"I! False to you!" echoed our hero. "Miss Brown, will you be so good as to tell me at once, and plainly, what you are talking about?"

Orinthia Brown's sallow cheeks reddened—her eyes sparkled ominously, as she drew from her pocket the precious missive.

"Do you mean to say, sir, that you didn't write this letter?" she demanded.

Gilbert took the letter and scrutinized it closely.

"Yes, of course, I wrote the letter!"

"Then, dearest——"

"Stop, though," he interrupted, frantically. "It wasn't to you!"

"Not to me!"

"No! Do you suppose I want to marry you!"

Miss Orinthia uttered a shrill shriek—but the next moment she was alone! Gilbert Mott had vanished.

For the matter was growing serious now. If Georgia were to be won, she must be won at once, before Fate conspired with any other old maid to deprive him of her coveted love.

"Georgia," he said, planting himself resolutely beside her. "I have got something I wish to say to you."

"You had a great deal better say it to your beloved Miss Orinthia," said Georgia, tossing her flaxen curls.

"But she isn't my beloved Miss Orinthia," cried Gilbert.

"I supose you will be denying your own handwriting next," said Georgia, indignatly. But it's no use; I saw the letter myself."

"But, Georgia, the letter was written to you."

"Then," said Georgia, brightening up a little, "how did she get it?"

"That's just what I can't comprehend myself," said Gilbert; "but one thing I am very certian of—I love you, and you alone, and I won't leave you until you tell me whether the love is returned."

And he did not; neither was it ne cessary for him to stay there very long.

But to this day nobody, save Billy, the irrepressible, knows exactly how Georgia's letter came into Miss Orinthia Brown's hands.

Conkling on the Science of Slugging.

Roscoe Conkling was one of the most interested spectators at the sparring match between Sullivan and Ryan. He was accompanied by a friend and sat among the reporters. The ex-senator, contrary to his usual mood, was in a talkative humor, and freely made comments and passed opinions on fighting and fighters.

"What is my opinion of these sparring matches? Well, I see no harm in them. Of course, if they become brutal, why they should be stopped. But as I have seen them, and I've seen a great many of them, there is nothing bad in them. For instance, I saw Sullivan box with Mitchell. I saw him have the opportunity more than once to strike and hurl Mitchell if he chose, and he refrained. It is time enough to stop sparring when it passes the verge of sparring and becomes an attempt to hurt or injure a man. But when two men are evenly matched, and each is striving his best, there is, in my view, nothing harmful in the combat."—New York Telegram.

THE WEDDING RING.

A heavy band of yellow gold
Around a finger brown and old—
Engraved, yet smooth, half worn away—
This halo of a wedding day.

To her it is no secret thing,
This circlet called a wedding ring;
But ever does it seem to me
Prophetic of some mystery.

Its sacred mission I adore,
It crowned her queen in days of yore
Gave emphasis to lover's vow,
A trusted secret even now.

It seems encased with magic spell;
Within its portals memories dwell
From which the world must stand apart,
Nor know the throbbings of her heart.

Then why should I, though unaware
To her, its secret ask to share?
These are not mine, for on her hand
She holds them clasped with golden band.

This token, then, shall ever be
Enwrapt in silent mystery;
This hand and ring shall keep untold
The story of the band of gold.

AN OLD TIME LOVE STORY.

The afternoon sun was glowing on the old portraits in Mrs. Knight's low wainscoted parlor as she sat gossiping with her friend. Why is it old ladies do not wear changeable gray silks now? Nothing can be prettier, and Mrs. Temple looked well in hers.

"Well, my dear Constance, which do you think she will have?"

"Indeed," said Mrs. Knight, "I do not know, but strongly suspect it will be the captain, and wish I liked him better. He hasn't good eyes and has a furtive way of looking at one, as if he had something to conceal. It may be because he knows his eyes are not much to look at. I have observed that persons who are convinced that their eyes are ugly do not show them much."

"I'm sure," responded Mrs. Temple, "to quote my Aunt Patty, 'I've nothing agin the man,' but it's true that we know nothing whatever about him."

"Except," added Mrs. Knight, "that he is a handsome stranger and appears to have money."

"Yes, and there is Eustace Tracy—poor, it is true, but so well connected and so much in love with Caroline!—really, quite as good looking as the Captain, too. Alas! if we could only choose husbands for our friends!"

"Indeed," said Mrs. Knight, "I wouldn't dare take such a tremendous responsibility on my shoulders. There is Caroline out riding with Captain Aldine now. She grows more beautiful every day."

Both ladies rushed precipitately to the window to see the subject of their conversation dash by in a handsome turnout.

Well, Caroline Claiborne generally had her own way, and did intend to marry the Captain. A handsome, elegant girl she was—petted and admired in her aunt's family. Yet unfortunately she had no male relative living. She was an orphan, quite alone in the world, but left with sufficient income to dress well, and was the pride and darling of her old aunt, whom Captain Aldine, with his "false, flattering tongue" had fully convinced that he was a most brilliant match for her niece.

Eustace Tracy, it was true, has long loved her in silence, seeming to regard her even in church as "the saint of his deepest devotion." But he was a poor, briefless barrister and had never "told his love." Eustace, too, felt that vague distrust of Captain Aldine, but was too noble by far to say one word in disfavor of a successful rival. In his heart of hearts he vowed to retain his friendship for Caroline and make her interests his own, although sore with jealousy. He felt that having loved so peerless a woman he could never think of another. As I said before, it was a pity the girl had no male relatives.

It was a significant fact that none of Captain Aldine's family either wrote to the bride or appeared at the wedding (presents were not in vogue in those days), all of which her lover smoothed over with plausible excuses which completely deceived Caroline and her aunt, Miss Harriet; but these facts were the cause of many misgivings to the two ladies who were their mutual friends.

Caroline was radiantly lovely in her bridal robes of white satin, with her mother's old point lace and diamonds. Her lover's gift was an opal bracelet.

"Don't wear it, honey," said her old nurse, apprehensively. "I've heard them stones don't bring no good to anybody."

Which very negative assertion Caroline merely laughed at, saying it was pretty and she meant to wear it, whether the omen were bad or good.

After the wedding, which was a gay one, Captain Aldine had to say good-by to his fair bride, being ordered to sea, but had he not secured his prize?

Caroline had decided to remain with her aunt until his return. Only a day or two after he sailed a package arrived through the mail, sealed and addressed to Captain Aldine in a lady's hand. Caroline had just finished writing a long letter to her husband to be sent at the earliest opportunity, and said to Miss. Harriet: "I must open it and see if it is of importance; and I can send it with mine."

The letter was covered with post marks, as if it had traveled far in search of him. Miss Harriet was feeding the canary and did not observe Caroline until she had broken the seal; she was the next moment startled by a shriek, and Caroline fell fainting to the floor. "My poor child, what is the matter?" she cried, and seizing the letter she read, "My dear husband." She turned hastily to the signature—"Your affectionate wife, Frances Aldine." There was no mistake about it, Captain Aldine had another wife, who begged him in piteous terms to return to her.

Poor Caroline had by this time recovered consciousness—but; alas! a consciousness of perfidy in the man whom she had implicitly trusted.

"I shall never willingly look upon his face again," cried she, passionately. "Yet, how shall I escape him?"

Her aunt soothed her as well as she could, and promised all the protection in her power.

Years passed. Captain Aldine returned and had the audacity to seek Caroline and claim her for his wife, declaring in feigned rage that the letter was a forgery. The contrary had, however, been conclusively proved, and Caroline resorted to all sorts of stratagem in order to elude him.

It was strange, indeed, that she did not resort to the law, but I never heard that she did. At one time she was compelled to escape on the roof of the house at dead of night, and take refuge with her old friend, Mrs. Temple.

Need I say it was a relief to learn that his vessel had gone down at sea? Yet she feared that it was untrue, and he might yet return to torment her. Meanwhile her aunt died, and she was thrown upon her own resources. Being still a beautiful and attractive woman, she had many lovers. Eustace Tracy was an invaluable friend, and she was not too proud to accept assistance from him in finding employment for her willing and accomplished fingers.

She understood mineralogy perfectly, and added to her slender income by arranging cabinets and lovely shell ornaments, which were fashionable at that time.

In the course of years Captain Aldine did not return, and Caroline Cliaborne (as she always called herself) breathed freely once more.

Instead of placing my moral at the end of my story, I will bring it in now so that it may not escape you.

When you have a secret confided to you, do not even hint that you know it. Do not say, "I should like to tell you something you would give your eyes to hear."

Mrs. Knight and Mrs. Temple were, as you know, great gossips as well as friends. One morning in the course of conversation, Mrs. Knight said mysteriously to the latter:

"I was present at a secret marriage some time ago, and, my dear, I should greatly enjoy telling you about it, but am bound to secrecy."

Mrs. Temple had too much old-fashioned politeness to press her friend, but, of course, was consumed with curiosity. Not long after this conversation, she entered Caroline's room unannounced, and to her surprise found her mending a gentleman's coat.

Caroline blushed and started a little, but soon regained her self-possession, when she explained that her friend, Mr. Tracy, was obliged to go to Washington on business in great haste, and had begged her to sew a button on his coat. Mrs. Temple would have thought nothing of this trivial circumstance had not her suspicions been aroused; but, putting that and that together immediately the thought flashed upon her, "Here's the secret marriage!" So it proved. In the course of time a notice appeared in the papers to the effect that Eustace Tracy and Caroline Claiborne had been married eleven years previous, and now wished to announce their marriage publicly.

Why, you ask, had it peen kept secret so long? Caroline explained to her friends that she had long been haunted by the fear that the man whose wickedness had shadowed her life would again return to persecute her, and a duel might be the result. Moreover, Eustace was not in a position to support a wife in the style he wished, and all his relatives maintained; but he had been successful, and was now both distinguished and wealthy. An elegant home in Washington was now ready for his still beautiful and stately bride. There a reception was held which was attended by the elite of the city. Their constancy was rewarded after many years.

A Phrenologist's Bumps.

From the Louisville Post.

A man in the East End, who has acquired considerable reputation as a phrenologist, lectured on phrenology before the congregation of the Cable Street Church recently. After a few preliminary remarks he invited any one present who so desired to step forward and have his character read. A few heads were felt, and an exhibition of skill was given to the enjoyment of those who witnessed the performance.

"Will anybody else step forward and have his character read and the field of his talent revealed to him?" shouted the phrenologist. A young man stepped out from the rear of the church and sauntered down the aisle. The phrenologist very seriously ran his hands over the man's head several times, pausing here and there at a protruding bump. Then looking the victim of his examination squarely in the eyes, he turned him around slowly till his face was brought in full view of the spectators. With his left hand resting on the victim's head, he made a gesticulation with the right which portended some marvellous discovery, and then proceeded to address the audience on the result of his examination.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "beware of this man! Beware of him, I tell you! He is dangerous. He is a thief. Here, John," addressing the porter, "lock up that safe; there is a thief in in the house."

He had hardly gotten the words out of his mouth and was sawing the air for some further witty remarks on the subject when the victim of his ridicule reached out his left duke and tapped the phrenologist on the neck, sending him rolling on the floor. The blow was followed up by the enraged young man who had been pronounced a thief, and the phrenologist was in imminent danger of a severe drubbing, when several men interfered.

A Lady's View of the Harem.

Interview With ex-Governor Stanford.

During our ten days sojourn in Constantinople, in January of last year, Mrs. Stanford and I managed to see pretty much everything that was worth seeing, a fact that was greatly due to the courtesy of General Wallace, the U. S. Minister at that Capital. For example, Mrs. Stanford was a guest in several of the most aristocratic harems, while she and I were accorded the somewhat unusual privilege of inspecting the crown jewels. I may say that my wife was not favorably impressed with the matrimonial condition of Turkish women, for she found that even those of the highest rank had been so persistently treated as overgrown children that their thoughts and actions were of a decidedly infantile turn. They play with pet animals as the little girls in this country do with their dolls, are indolent in manner, and, as a rule, slovenly in dress, although making a brilliant outward show when visitors are expected. Their utter seclusion from the world is pitiable to think of, and must naturally dwarf their intellects; while their enforced laziness, of course, tends to develop selfishness and obesity. Many of their faces are pretty, but they are rarely marked with the intelligence that is born as a rule, of experience and observation. The chief wife in the seraglio of the late Sultan is treated with profound respect by the few who come in contact with her, but she told Mrs. Stanford that she had not been outside the harem walls for twelve years past. Can you imagine an American woman, rich in power, health and money, who would voluntarily submit to such absolute stagnation? If the ultra woman's rights advocates would only make a visit to Turkey they might cease to regard an American husband as "that tyrant, man."

The "Smart Salesman."

From the Lewiston Journal.

"One night a sailor came into the store and wanted to buy a blanket. Of course he wanted a cheaper one than any we had in stock and I was afraid my man—he hadn't been here long—would let him go. Not a bit of it. He marched him off to a lot of big horse blankets and pointed out their size and dilated on their merits. The sailor seemed pleased at the size and quality, but asked what them holes were for. 'Oh,' said my man, 'that's a new thing and very popular. You just get into your berth and pass this belt (meaning the surcingle) through those holes and fasten it around you, and it can't slip off. We sell lots of them, but if you don't like it we can cut it off.' The sailor did like it, and paid his money and left the store happy.

"Another time we had a pair of fur-lined boots or shoes we could not get rid of. When one day a young man from the country came in and wanted something of the sort, my clerk brought out this identical pair. The customer was delighted and tried 'em on, but they were so small they hurt him badly. My salesman saw the difficulty immediately, and was as ready as ever. 'Look here, stranger,' he said. 'What are you trying to do? You've got your stockings on, haven't you?' The man admitted that he had. 'Why, these are made on purpose to save stockings,' said my new acquisition, 'we sell lots of them.' The gentleman from the rural districts took off his stockings and his foot slipped in beautifully. He was tickled and took the shoes, paid for them, and went out well pleased.

Some day the smart salesman may prove too smart for his employer.

The house flourished though the ntry was in great straits and the enor- ous profits realized at that time by nkers—which enabled them to pur- ase large estates and outshine the old torial aristocracy—made the pro- sion as unpopular among the higher sses as it had been among the un- asonable masses. By them a banker s looked upon as a sort of licensed rger, who created enormous sums of oney by merely signing square pieces flimsy paper; and I am persuaded the bbery of a bank would have been con- ered by many people quite as meri- ious an action as the dispersal of a nd of coiners.

As story of the soldiers and the fear- inuations of a bloody deed exe- n one or all, it was a prodigious montade—for Tom was such a hearted individual that if he had kitten it would have made him y for a week. e village at which the remaining were to be delivered was only a urther on, he determined to walk he fields and join me after he xecuted his commission. He looked carefully at the priming of his pistol, stuck it ostentatiously in the outside breast pocket of his great coat; and with stately step, marched off with the heavy money bag in his hand. I put the whip to the horse, and trotted merrily forward, thinking nothing whatever of robbery or danger, in spite of momentary conversation of Tom Ruddle. Our first customer resided at the outskirts of the village—a farmer who required a considerable amount of gold. I pulled up at the narrow dark entrance up the lane with my golden treasure. I delivered it into the hands of its owner, and manfully resisting all his hospitable invitations, I took my leave and walked rapidly toward the gig.

As I drew near I perceived in the clear starlight a man mounted on the step and groping under the seat. I ran forward, and the man, alarmed at my approach, rapidly raised himself from his stooping position, and, presenting a pistol, fired it so close to my eyes that the flash blinded me for a moment; the action was so sudden and the surprise so great, that for a short time, too, I was bewilderd, and scarcely knew whether I was alive or dead. The old horse never started at the report, and I rested my hand on the rim of the wheel, while I endeavored to gather my scattered thoughts. The first thing I ascertained was that the man had disappeard. I then hurriedly examined under the seat, and, to my intense relief, perceived the remaining money bag still in its place.

There was a slit in it, however, near the top, as if made by a knife—the robber probably resolving merely to posses himself of the coin, without the dangerous accompaniment of the leathern sack, by which he might have been traced.

"Tell ye what," said a voice close beside me, as I concluded my scrutiny, "I don't like practical jokes like that—firing off pistols to frighten folks. You'll alarm the whole village."

"Tom," I said, "Now's the time to show your courage. A man has robbed the gig—or tried to do it—and has fired at me within a yard of my face."

Tom grew perceptibly pale at this information. "Was there only one? Then the accomplices are near. What's to be done? Shall we arouse Farmer Malins and get his men to help?"

"Not for the world," I said. "I would rather face a dozen shots than have my carelessness known at the bank. It would ruin me for life. Let us count the money in this bag, quickly deliver it if it be right, and then follow the robber's course." It was only a hundred-guinea bag, that one, but the counting was nervous work. We found three guineas wanting. We were luckily able to supply them from our own pockets, having just received our quarter's salaries, and I left Tom there, delivered the bag to its destination very near at hand, without a word of the robbery, and went back to him. "Now which way did he go?" said Tom, resuming a little of his former air, clutching his pistol like the chief of a chorus of banditti in a melodrama. I told him I had been so confused that I had not observed which way he had retreated.

Tom was an old hand at poaching—though he was a clergyman's son, and ought to have set a better example.

"I have heard a hare stir a hundred yards," he said, and laid his ear close to the frosty ground.

If he's within a quarter of a mile I shall hear him move." I also lay down on the ground. We heard nothing but our breathing and the breathing of the horse. "Hush," said Tom at last. "He has come out of his hiding. I hear a man's step far away to the left; bring your pistol and let us follow."

I took the pistol and found the flint down on the pan. The man had fired at me with my own weapon, and no wonder he had fired so suddenly, for Tom now acknowledged to his belief that he had forgotten to uncock it. "Never mind," said Tom; "I'll blow his brains out with mine and you can split his skull with the butt-end of yours. Tell ye what! It's of no use to prepare those malefactors. I'll fire the moment I see him."

"Not until I tell you whether he is the robber or not."

"Should you know him do you think?"

"In the flash of the powder I saw a pair of haggard and amazed eyes which I shall never forget." "Oh, then," said Tom, "we'll have a £200 reward, and see the rascal hanged besides." We set off, slowly and noiselessly in the direction pointed out. Occasionally he applied his ear to the ground, and always muttering: "We have him! we have him!" proceeded in the same careful manner as before. Suddenly Tom said: "He's doubling. He has been leading us on the wrong scent all this time; he has turned toward the village." "Then our plan," I said, "should be to get there before him. If we intercept him in that way he can't escape, and I feel sure I could identify him if I saw him by candle-light." "Tell ye what—that's the plan," replied my companion. "We'll watch at the end of the village and arrest him the moment he comes in."

We crept through an opening of the hedge and got once more in the straight lane that led to the village. It was now very late and the cold was so intense that it kept every person within doors; for we heard no sound in the whole hamlet, except, high up in the clear air, the ticking of the church clock, and the loud jangles of the quarters, that seemed like peals of artillery in the excited state of our minds and senses. Close to the church—which appeared to guard the entrance of the village, with its low, buttressed walls and its watch-tower of a steeple—there was a wretched, ruined-looking cottage, which projected so far into the lane that the space between it and the church was not more than eight or nine feet. It struck us both at the same moment that if we could find a lodgment here it would be impossible for the man to slip into the village without our observation. After listening for a while at the windows and doors of the building, we concluded it was uninhabited; gently pushing open the door, we climbed a narrow stone staircase, and were making for a gable-end window which we had observed from the road, and which commaded the whole approach of the village, when we heard a voice say in a whisper, as we attained the garret we were in search of: "Is that you, William?"

We stopped for a minute or two, and the speaker's expectation was disappointed. We now placed ourselves at the window, and listened for the slightest sound. We remained there listening for a long time. Several quarters had died off into "the eternal melodies," far up in the church tower, and we were beginning to despair of seeing the object of our search, when Tom nudged me noiselessly with his elbow.

"Tell ye what," he whispered, very softly, "there's a footstep around the corner. See! There's a man under the hedge looking up at the window. There—he moves. We must be after him. Hello! Stop—he crosses the lane. He's coming into this very house."

I certainly did see a figure silently steal across the road and disappear under the doorway of the buildings we were in. But we had no light, and we knew nothing of the arrangement of the rooms. Another quarter thrown off from the old church clock warned us that the night was rapidly passing away. We had almost resolved to retrace our steps if possible, and get back to where we had left our unfortunate horse, when I was again nudged by my friend's elbow. "Tell ye what," he whispered, "something's going on;" and he pointed to a feeble glimmer on the rafters of the roof above us. The light proceeded from the next room, which had not been built above the height of the ceiling joists, so that the roof was common to both chambers—the adjoining one and that in which we were—the partition wall being only seven or eight feet high. We could have heard anything that was said, but we listened in vain for the slightest sound.

The light, however, continued to burn; we saw it flickering across the top of the habitation, and dimly playing far up among the dark thatch of the roof.

"Tell ye what!" said Tom. "If we could get up to these old joists, we could see into the next room. Hold my pistol till I get up and—tell ye what—then I can shoot 'em easy."

"For heaven's sake, Tom!" I said, "be careful. Let me see whether it is the man." "Come up, then," said Tom, who now bestrode one of the main beams and gave me a hand to aid me ascend. We were both on the level of the wall, and by placing our heads a little forward, could see every portion of the neighboring room. A miserable room it was. There was a small round table, there were a couple of old chairs, but utter wretchedness was the characteristic of the cheerless and fireless apartment. There was a person, apparently regardless of the cold, seated at a table and reading a book. The little taper which had been lighted without any noise, was only sufficient to throw its illumination on the features and figure of the reader, and on the pallid features—but she was young and very pretty; or the mystery and strangeness of the incident threw such an interest around her that I thought so. Her dress was very scanty, and a shawl wrapped closely around her shoulders perhaps displayed, rather than concealed, the deficiency of her clothing in other respects. Suddenly we saw at the farther end of the room a figure emerge from the darkness. Tom grasped his pistol more firmly and put the cock back, preventing it from making any noise with his thumb. The man stood in the doorway, as if uncertain whether to enter or not.

He looked for a long time at the woman, who still continued her reading, and then silently advanced. She heard a step, and lifted up her head, and looked in his face without saying a word. Such a face, so pale, so agitated, I never in my life saw.

"We shall go to-morrow," he said; "I have got some money—as I expected." And with these words he laid three golden guineas on the table before her. Still she said nothing—but watched his countenance with her lips apart.

"Tell ye what!" said Tom, "that's the money. Is that the man?"

"I don't know yet, till I see his eyes." In the meantime the conversation went on below.

"I borrowed these pieces from a friend," continued the man, as if in answer to the look she bent on him; "a friend, I tell you. I might have had more, but I would take only three. They are enough to carry us to Liverpool, and once there, we are sure of a passage to the west."

"Once in the west, the world is before us. I can work, Mary. We are young—a poor man has no chance here, but we can go to America with fresh hopes——"

"And a good conscience?" said the woman in a whisper like Lady Macbeth's. The man was silent. At last he seemed to grow angry at the steadiness of her gaze.

"Why do you look at me in that manner? I tell you we shall start to-morrow."

"And the money?" said the woman?"

"I will send it back to my friend from whom I borrowed it out of my first earnings. I took only three in case it should incommode him to lend me more."

"I must see that friend myself," said Mary, "before I touch the money." "Tell ye what! Is it the man?" asked Tom. "Hush," I said; "let us listen."

"I recognized a friend of mine in one of the clerks in the Melfield bank. I give you my word, I got the coins from him."

"Tell ye what. He confesses," said Tom. "Let us spring on him by surprise—an ugly ruffian as I ever saw." "And with that sum," he continued, see what we can do. It will relieve us from our distress, which has come upon us—Mary, you know I speak the truth in this—from no other fault of mine than too much confidence in a treacherous friend. I can't see you starve. I can't see the baby reduced from our comfortable keeping to lie on straw at the end of a barn like this. I can't do it—I won't!" he went on, getting more impassioned in his words.

"At whatever cost, I will give you a chance of comfort and independence."

"And peace of mind?" replied Mary. "Oh, William, I must tell you what terrible fears have been in my heart all this dreary night, during your absence; I have read and prayed and turned for comfort to heaven."

"Oh, William, give the money back to your friend—I say nothing about the loan—take it back; I can't look at it. Let us starve, let us die, if it must be so—but take the money away." Tom Ruddle gently put down the cock of his pistol, and ran the sleeve of his coat across his eyes.

"Let us trust, William," the woman went on, "and deliverance will be found. The weather is very cold," she added. "There seems to be no visible hope; but I cannot altogether despair at this time of the year. This barn is not more humble than the manger in Bethlehem, which I have been reading about all night." At this moment a great clang of bell pealed from the old church tower; it was so near that it shook the rafters on which we sat and filled all the room with the sharp, ringing sound. "Hark!" cried the man, startled. "What's that?" "It's Christmas morning," said the woman. "Ah, William, William! what a different spirit we should welcome it with; in what a different spirit we have welcomed it, and many and many a happy time!"

He listened for a moment or two to the bells, then he sank on his knees and put his head on her lap, and there was perfect silence except the Christmas music.

"Tell ye what!" said Tom, "I remember we always sung a hymn at this hour in my father's house."

"Let us be off; I wouldn't disturb these people for a thousand guineas."

Some little noise was made by our preparations to descend. The man looked up while the woman still continued absorbed in prayer. My head was just on a level of the wall. Our eyes met. They were the same that had flashed so wildly when the pistol was fired from the gig. We continued our descent.

The man rose quietly from his knees and put his finger to his lips. When we got down stairs he was waiting for us at the door. "Not before her," he said.

"I would spare her the sight, if I could."

"I am guilty of the robbery, but I wouldn't have harmed you, sir. The pistol went off the moment I put my hand upon it. For God's sake, tell her of it gently when you take me away!"

"Tell ye what!" said Tom Ruddle—whose belligerent feeling had entirely disappeared—"the pistol was my mistake, and it's all a mistake together."

"Come to my friend and me, at the bank, the day after to-morrow, and—tell you what—the sharp wind brings water to my eyes. We'll manage to lend you some more."

So the bells still rang clear in the midnight air; and our drive home through the frosty lanes was the pleasantest drive we ever had in the whole of our lives.

THE GRAND CANON.

Six Thousand Feet from the Light of Day.

What words are to be used, unaided by pencil or brush, when one seeks to describe what the canon of the Colorado river really is? Its magnitude, its solemnity, the awful depth, the rushing waters, the towering cliffs, all speak to us; but we can not speak of them. Man is dwarfed by nature, abashed by her grandeur, silenced by the exhibition of her powers. Imagine the scene. A yellow-hued stream, rushing like a gust of angered wind along a rock-strewn bed and between a line of dark-hued cliffs. Look upward a thousand feet, and rocks look angrily down; gaze up another thousand feet, another, and still another, and there are the same dark-browed monsters glaring down upon you and upon the river. Look up again and now gaze for 6,000 feet into the air toward the heavens, and you can still see rough-edged rocks, all outlined against the sky, over a mile in height away, throwing up pinnacles and towers, and domes and isolated peaks, chipped and scarred, and dark, massive and irregular. The light of day is dimmed, the place is ful of loud, hoarse roars, the air is chilled, and the river, lashed into foaming fury, leaps madly along its course. Here are shadows that Rembrandt would have gloried in; here Dore might have copied nature and added to his fame. Here is the road to Dante's sombre halls. One stands within the very bowels of the earth, with all light and brightness lost to view. He sees the work of ages, the result of a mighty power. The earth is cleft in twain; it is as though a mountain, tall and strong, had been halved by some sharpened sword. Six thousand feet of stony depth! Six thousand feet beneath the light of day! There are no pleasant smiles of nature to be seen. No flowers grow, no shrubs appear, no birds are visible. Dark are the towering walls, and darker still their shadows, while the towers take on most uncouth shapes, and the river runs out of blackness to us and into darkness from us, a puny monster in comparison with its prison, a wayward child held in stern rebuke.

From the tops of the cliffs which form the Colorado's canon the river winding at their base is like a strand of gold. But it needs strong nerve to look from the great height into the depths below. Drop a stone and the splash it would make upon striking the water could not be seen. Even the noise the river makes is not audible, and the stream seems to flow noiselessly along its dark and rugged course. Turning from gaze into the canon, and looking about the country, the deep rent is seen stretching far away to the east and west, while in the distance are tall trees and rocks and bare brown hills. One questions why the canon was made and how—whether worn by the river or formed by volcanic action. But whatever the cause, it is a strange freak of nature, rivalling, with its grandeurs, all other sights, inviting comparisons but challenging competition. All other canons of the wild Southwest, where rivers delight to wind in darkened places, sink into insignificance when compared to this of the Rio Colorado.

She Cost Her Weight in Gold.

From the Tucson Star.

Mrs. Jesus Castro, an aged Mexican lady, now residing at American Flag, in the Santa Catilina mountains, is perhaps the only woman who, literally speaking, ever cost her husband her weight in gold. It is said that in the early gold-digging days of California she was a resident of Sonora, in which state she was born and grew to womanhood. When about the age of seventeen a paternal uncle, but a few years her senior, returned with his companions, gold-laden, from the El Dorado of the west and became desperately enamored of her. He sought her hand in marriage and was accepted, but the church refused, because of the near relationship existing between them, to solemnize the marriage.

Persuasion being in vain, he tried the power of gold to win the church his way, and succeeded only by the payment of her weight in gold. She at the time weighed 117 pounds, and against her in the scales the glittering dust was shoveled. Her affianced husband still had sufficient of this world's goods to provide a comfortable home and they were married. They lived happily together and she bore to her husband eleven children. In the course of years he died and she married again, Mr. Castro being her second husband. the above is a fact and not fiction, as living witnesses can prove.

Only three out of 40 Senators, and only 20 out of 240 representatives in the Massachusetts Legislature are farmers, says the New England Homestead.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

"Now, you're not a bit afraid, Mollie?"

"Afraid—of what? I'm not a baby."

"No, indeed; you're a hundred," mockingly.

"And if I've traveled all the way from Cincinnati to New York by myself, I don't know why I can't go from Leamington to London."

"Yes, but this isn't America, you know. And girls are so silly. I don't see what can happen to you, unless you put your head out of the window too far and get it knocked off. Now, don't be dignified. I'm telling you this to keep my spirits up. I'm afraid maybe the mater might cut up about my leaving you, but I can't let this chance for shooting slip, and the fellows won't wait. Hello! here's the train! First-class to London, guard. Nobody in the campartment? All right, Polly, jump in. Make my peace with the mater if she is vexed. Tra-la-la," cried my brother, giving me a hug and a kiss.

The door slammed. I was going to London all alone, when it opened again. A man rushed in pell-mell—gun, bag and fishing tackle.

"Just in time, guard?"

"Here's a shilling for your trouble. All alone, eh?"

"No, sir; a young lady, sir."

This time the door slammed securely, the key was turned and the guard disappeared.

It was half past four o'clock. A damp, dull afternoon. I looked at myself in the little mirror opposite. It reflected a tall, brown-eyed, brown-haired girl, with a pretty complexion and neat traveling dress. A very young person, eighteen at best, and a very strong and healthy one. We, my brother and I, had been to Warwick, Stratford, etc., and at the last moment he received a telegram from some college mates bidding him meet them in the north; they had formed a shooting party which was to start the next day. My mother was in London; so we determined, rather than destroy his pleasant trip, that I return to her alone.

The train was going at full speed, fifty-five miles an hour. I could scarcely, in the dim twilight of the December day, distinguish the rapidly moving trees and houses as we skirted along. After a little, I turned my eyes on my companion. He was a tall, raw-boned man, with gray eyes and long red hair; heavy red whiskers covered his face. He wore a shooting jacket and a loose flannel blouse. He fixed his eyes on me for five minutes without speaking. At a certain station the guard, our guard that was, got out and passed the window. I saw another official get on. Our guard touched his cap and boarded an out-going train. We started off with renewed rapidity. I was feeling almost lonely, and the slighest degree embarrassed by my close proximity to my unsociable companion, when he got up from his seat, opened his traveling bag, took out a pair of shears, and putting his hand on my shoulder, said:

"I want you to cut my hair."

"Cut your hair!" I cried, too amazed to be alarmed. "Are you crazy? Cut your hair!"

"Yes; cut my hair immediately."

"I will not!" I exclaimed. "Guard, guard, come to me! This man is crazy!"

I rushed to the door. It was locked of course; and the guard I knew, and who knew us, was miles away, having changed at the last station.

"It is useless to make disturbance," said the fellow. "I intend that you shall cut my hair! If you do not, I will kiss you."

Trembling, I took the shears.

"Wait. Put a towel around my neck; there. Thanks, very much. Now, carefully."

For a half hour I cut away. It had grown quite dark, only the dim light of the railroad lamp illumined the compartment.

"Is it all off?" he asked, producing his glass and peering at the cropped crown.

"Yes."

"Not bad for a beginner. Now for my whiskers. I can't shave, you see, for my arm is broken."

For the first time I saw that this member hung helplessly at his side.

"But I will not!" I screamed; "I will not!"

"Yes, you will," said my persecutor. "You will do just what I tell you. Kneel down here in front of me and cut my beard."

"I will not! I will not!"

"Very well;" and he advanced toward me.

"Instantly I was on my knees cutting away at the forest of undergrowth.

"As close as you can my dear. You will find the shears sharp. I don't believe you're left a hair on my head."

This took me longer than my previous job. The beard was stubborn, and monsieur very particular.

"All must go," he said, pensively; all my long love-locks and my lady-killers. But "necessity"—drawing a sigh—"cruel necessity knows no law."

He threw me a kiss with the tips of his bony fingers.

"I shall always dub you Cruel Necessity in my own mind."

His face being as clean shaven as my implement allowed, he bade me turn my back.

"I will not! oh, I will not!" I wept. "You will kill me! Oh, have mercy!"

"You will turn your back immediately," said my tormentor. "But first help me adjust my arm in this sling."

Like a whipped slave, I meekly tore the linen handkerchief he produced from the valise into two parts and bound it about his arm. At least he was brave, for the drops stood on his brow, but he did not quiver.

"Now take this lead and pencil under my eyes, and shadow my eyebrows; not too deeply, but as you would do your own, my dear, were you dressing for a ball."

I trembled. "The madman!" I whispered, below my breath. "Oh, the madman!" But I did as I was bid. One faltering look, and I felt his arm would be around me.

"Now look out of the window. Mind, if you so much as move that pretty little head, on my honor as a gentleman I must take my revenge."

For twenty minutes (or was it a hundred years?) I sat gazing into the darkness without. The lightning rapidity of the train as we rushed along made a leap through the window suicidal. I thought of my mother and my home, and, poor child, of my girlish sins and negligences. I was too frightened then to cry, too stunned to make any resistance.

"Look, my pretty dear!" said a gay voice.

I heard the window open, and a black bundle fell. Was I dreaming or mad? There, under the light of the little oil lamp, a breviary in his hand, with downcast eyes and reverential air, was a young priest, in the full flowing vestments of a fellow of a Jesuit college. The fishing tackle, the gun, the valise, the shears, the towel, with the bundle of hair, were all gone; and with them the thief, murderer, assassin—I knew not what he might have been.

"Where is he?" I said, presently, hoarsely—was it my own voice issuing from my bloodless lips? "What has become of the man—the murderer?

"You have been sleeping dear child," said the father, gently. "No one is here but myself. You are under the spiritual and temporal care of the church."

He smiled and moved a little. I recognized the lately denuded crown and rudely shaven beard. The bandaged arm was hidden under his flowing sleeve.

"Lonnon, sir! Ay, ay! all right, sir. First-class? Yes, sir; one gentleman and a lady. This way sir," cried the guard.

I heard the door unlock, and two policemen rushed in. They gazed at us in blank surprise.

"Certainly, your reverence; pass by. There's a mistake somewhere. Where's the warrant, Bill? 'Tall fellow in fisherman's get-up; long, red beard, red hair, gun, valise, fishing tackle; got on at Leamington.' By George! he threw himself out the window."

And they rushed to the side of the compartment.

"But this young lady was here all the time. Say, young lady, did you happen to see a tall fellow answering this description get on at Leamington? The guard changed at A——. He is Marshall, the defaulting bank clerk; he scooped last week with £10,000. He was traced to Leamington to-day; they wired us from there. Say, your reverence, did you happen— Hello! where's his reverence?"

When I came to myself, I was lying on my own little bed in the London lodging-house, and my mother told me slowly and by degrees that when she entered the carriage a moment afterward I was in a dead faint, lying on the floor, and that I was ill a long time afterward.

They found the gray valise, and shooting clothes and my bundle of hair on the railroad track where they had been thrown; but his unwilling accomplice had rendered such good service to their quondam owner that neither we nor his detractors ever heard of or in any way traced him again.

Everyday Politeness.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph.

It is astonishing how many people there are in the world who do not know intuitively what common politeness dictates; but still more astonishing how many there are who, knowing what it dictates, do not seem to reflect that in discarding the rules of politeness they indirectly sacrifice themselves by ignoring rules deduced for the comfort of all from the experience of mankind; for the purpose, first of all, to prevent mankind's treading on each others toes, and then, in the higher grade, to make their pathway pleasant. Trifles, it is said, make up the sum of life; but, paradoxically, nothing is, therefore, a trifle that goes to make up a sum which, for the most favored of mortals, may indeed be in excess of his deserts, but which is for any one never absolutely great. It is only by making the fund of comfort a great tontine that men, women and children can secure the full amount of whatever life has in it of possible enjoyment.

A curiosity in the shape of a well which produces warm water is exciting no little interest among the residents of Quinton, N. J. The well is situated in a window-glass factory, and it is supposed that the water from the springs feeding the well passes under the furnaces and is thus heated.

Dr. Leland, a Georgia physician who died recently, was for a long time unconscious before death. Reviving, he told his family and friends that his soul, separate from his body, had seen them all weeping around his old frame as it lay dead in the chair. He was loath to return to it, but was forced by an impulse he could not resist.

George Lewis, colored, of Dooly county, Florida, has a tame gopher, which has made its home in a hole in his yard for four years. He has named it Tobe, and in warm weather, when the children go to the hole and call him by name, he will crawl out and follow them all over the yard, eating from their hands and doing other funny tricks.

The sanitary side of our school system is examined in The Andovar Review, and the conclusion is reached "that there are evils connected with common schools which are more than the necessary incidents of a nearly perfect system." The point insisted on is that the present school management contributes largely to the increase of nervous disorders, and interferes seriously with he health of the pupils.

The pastor of a colored Baptist church in Baltimore was charged by members with having run away with money belonging to the congregation. On his return he showed that they had never intrusted him with more than $5 at a time, intended as a fortnightly installment of his salary, and then crushed his adversaries by asking someone to explain how he could support himself and run away upon such an amount.

The writer in The St. Louis Medical Journal advises young practitioners never to make fun of an old woman's remedy. He will not only give offense, but may miss a valuable aid in his practice. The writer adds: "In 1830, while practicing in Madison county, Illinois, I was induced by the representations of an old woman to make the trial, in dysintery and diarrhea, of tablespoonful-doses of pure cidar vinegar, with the addition of sufficient salt to be noticeable, and it acted so charmingly that I have never used anything else."

The baneful influence of the modern cooking academy will penetrate the interior of our best households, in spite of all endeavors to return to the good old-fashioned cooking of our mothers. "That looks very nice indeed," remarked Mr. Fitzjoy to his better half as he uncovered the breakfast dish. "What is it?" "That is the new cook's specialty. Tripe smoothered in crumbs of bread." "Well, I should say so," as he made an unsuccessful attempt to cut it. "It's mighty tough." "I don't see. The cook had a diploma. She ought to be a good one." "Oh, that accounts for it. She's fried the diploma."

"That's a lovely horseshoe ornament," remarked young Kellogg while calling on an East New York girl, pointing to a horseshoe over the door, decorated with forget-me-nots and daisies. He Wanted One Suspender.

About a week ago a stranger entered a clothing store on Michigan avenue and asked for one second-hand suspender. The dealer looked at him for something less than half an hour and then broke out with:

"What blace do you dake me for? Oof I keep some second-hand suspenders do you suppose I cut 'em apart?"

"Isn't it your object to oblige the public?" asked the man.

"I likes to sell goots, of course, but nobody comes in here und asks me for one pant leg."

"Certainly not, but this is a different case. Some men wear two suspenders—some one. I belong to the one-suspender class of humanity. So did Shakspeare, Milton, Byron, Dickens, and others. Is it right for you to cater to one class and exclude the other?"

"I sells you one pair of suspenders at cost."

"I never buy what I don't want. I want one suspender and I'll not take a pair."

"Vhell, I don't sell 'em dot vhay."

"I will give you time to think over it," said the stranger. "There is no occasion for haste, as I am now wearing a clothes line around my waist. Give the matter due thought and serious reflection."

"It's no use—no use. I don't sell coat-tails mitout der coat, nor some west mitout a back."

The next day the man returned and renewed his application, and his list of one suspender men bore the names of Washington and Napoleon.

"Do I sells a coat mitout any sleeves!" indignantly exclaimed the clothier; and the placid stranger placidly replied:

"Take another day to think over it. View the subject from all sides. It never pays to move rashly."

Every day he returned on his errand, and yesterday a policeman was at hand to give him the collar, walk him around the corner, and say:

"Now, then, I'll give you a chance to keep out of the cooler! If you come here again you are good for thirty days!"

"Oh, I'll go, of course," replied the man. "Does he exclude the one-suspender class?"

"He does."

"And has made up his mind to cater to the other?"

"I presume he has."

"Very well, then. I have never wore but a single suspender, and I'll be hanged if I can be bull-dozed into buying any clothing to pack away in the garret! My motto is: 'One suspender or death!' and I never go back on a motto. What is good 'nuff for the crowned heads of Europe will fit me, even if they put shingle-nails in place of buttons. Good-bye, old buttons—one suspender or a grave in the valley!"—Detroit Free Press.

Learning to Talk.

Since the State university has been located in Austin, Texas, people have to be very careful how they use language, as the following dialogue will show, which occurred between a student and a lawyer.

"Say, wait a minute," said the lawyer.

"Where is your minute, and what will I weight it with?" asked the student, looking around as if expecting to see something lying near.

"Oh, I mean stop a moment."

"I do not see any moment to stop, and would not know how to stop one should I see it," said the student, still looking puzzled.

"Thunder! I want you to hold on a while so that I can talk to you. You know what I mean."

"Well, if you will show me a while I will try and hold on to it, if that will assist you in speaking to me."

"Great heavens! What shall I say to get you to wait where you are until I can overtake you and speak with you?" yelled the now indignant lawyer.

"Why, that is all right; I now understand you. If you had at first said 'wait for me a minute,' instead of telling me to 'hold on a moment,' or to 'wait a minute,' I should have known what you meant." The lawyer was so mad that he forgot what he was going to say, and went down the street with his mouth fairly working with rage.—Arkansaw Traveler.

STEEL-RAIL men have no reason to be alarmed because the building of new railroad lines is falling off. The increase of traffic at the same time increases the wear on rails, and the 110,000 miles of rail in the United States will alone require over 750,000 tons of new rails annually.

A YOUNG Spanish artist has lately received $1,000 from a California lady for a painted fan of black silk. The subject is a representation of the language of the fan in three ways: "I hate you," "I like you," and "I see you," and it is exceedingly clever, as well as delicate in treatment.

One of the jurors said he was of the opinion that when a man put his umbrella to bed and then stood all night in the umbrella rack in the hallway, he was not sober.

WHAT is said to be the greatest frieze in the world is now making in Boston. It is in buff terra cotta, and will adorn the army and navy memorial hall in Hartford, Conn. The frieze will encircle the entire structure, and will be in two sections, eighty-seven and a half feet in length and six feet nine inches in height. The central figure is that of a woman, the genius of Hartford, bearing the mural crown upon her head, her hands extended toward the returning heroes, to whom she gives the wreaths of victory. Altogether the frieze will have over one hundred emblematic figures.

A NATURALIST gives this as an illustration of the intelligence of the common spider: I took a large spider from his web under the basement of a mill, put him on a chip and set him afloat on the quiet waters of a pond. He walked about the sides of his bark, surveying the situation very carefully, and when the fact that he was really afloat and about a yard from the shore seemed to be fully comprehended, he looked out for the nearest land. This point fairly settled upon, he immediately began to cast a web for it. He threw it as far as possible in the air, and with the wind. It soon reached the shore and made fast to the spires of grass. Then he turned himself about, and in true sailor fashion began to haul in hand over hand on his cable. Carefully he drew upon it until his bark began to move toward the shore. As it moved the faster, he the faster drew upon it to keep his hawser taut and from touching the water. Very soon he reached the shore, and, quickly leaping to terra firma, he sped his way homeward.

SUMMARY OF NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Another Day with Grant.

Last Monday night Rev. Dr. Newman said: "Gen. Grant is appearantly much better to-day. He is—well, I don't know any better word than brighter; that is the worldly expression for it."

"Do you think there is any decided improvement, then?"

"Well, I can't tell about that. I only judge from what the physicians say. I suppose, however, that this is one of the characteristics of the desease. He is certainly better, though, than he was on yesterday." Another authority said: Gen. Grant, according to all reports from the house, is stronger to-night than he has been in a week. He had passed a very quiet day and was resting quietly this evening. About a week ago he was very weak and faint, while to-night he was strong enough to walk from his room to the library and back again several times. The cancer, however, was certainly progressing, but not very rapidly. It was simply a question of how long it would be before the cancer would reach a vital point and terminate fatally.

One of the pleasing episodes of the day was the arrival of a special messenger from President Cleveland, Marshal Morton McMichael, of the District of Columbia, at the house early in the afternoon. He had been sent over specially by President Cleveland to express to the general and his family the president's solicitude as to his welfare, and also to convey his sympathies with them. The call was a pleasant one, and very gratifying to the family.

Gen. Grant Dazed by Anodines.

New York Special: It was between 6 and 7 o'clock when Gen. Grant finally awoke. The effects of the last anodyne was seen in the dazed and semi-delirious condition of his mind. As he lay on his couch he began to call up reminiscences of the war, and talked of the prominent generals who took part in it. He imagined that they had come to call on him, and demanded that the doors be thrown open and the visitors admitted. Then came a momentary period of consciousness, but he again relapsed into a wandering state. This time the general called to Harrison to dress him for a reception that he had promised to attend, and at which he was to speak. He thought that his valet had neglected his duties, and ordered him to hurry. The illusion passed away in a few moments, however, and the general's mind became perfectly clear. For some reason the attempt was made to keep his dazed condition on awakening from the public, and no statement of it was made by the family or physicians. It leaked out, however, through other authoritative channels. When questioned about it, Dr. Shrady admitted everything but the story about the general's illusions, which he declined to talk about.

Wholesale Tragedy in Missour.

Advices from Holt county, Mo., say a terrible tragedy occurred recently at the farm house of Widow Hardin, fifteen miles from St. Joe. It appears that William Clark, a farmer and married man, had seduced the daughter of the Widow Hardin, and he, the widow and her daughter and lawyer Durgan, had a conference with a view to settling the matter, and no result was reached, but during the evening Clark called at the widow's house, which was only a short distance from his own. A hot discussion arose, during which Clark shot and killed the widow, mortally wounded the daughter, and badly wounded a young son of the widow. Clark then went home, fed his hogs, and did other work about the place. The next morning his dead body was found in a pile of straw a short distance from his house with a bullet hole in his head and an empty pistol in his hand. All the parties concerned had unenviable names.

Opinion of the Thunderer.

The papers are filled with rumors of aggressive movements both on the part of Russia and England, and also for negotiations for a settlement of difference, but the London Times says: While politicians believe or pretend to believe, that there is a prospect of peace, commercial and financial circles, who have powerful motives for forming opinions, care to believe Russia is bent on forcing a quarrel. An emphatic indication that the position is critical is afforded by Lord Dufferin's reference to the attack on the Afghans as unprovoked. Russia is preparing for war on a large scale, without attempting to conceal the fact. It now appears beyond doubt that the Russian government was appraised of the Penjdah battle by April 10. While the British government is waiting for an explanation, it is quite possible Gen. Komaroff is pushing forward under telegraphic orders from St. Petersburg.

The Pursuit of Rebel Riel.

Col. Irvine keeps telegraphing from Prince Albert via Battleford, that it is folly for Middleton to push on with his present force, as even if he (Irvine) could join him, which is doubtful, the rebels would outnumber Middleton's force. This Middleton does not believe. He will have more than a thousand men when he is joined by Grassette's 250, and Irvine has 400, counting civilians, but is probably afraid to leave town on account of women and children. All Middleton's advices are that Riel's force does not exceed 500, and that he is without artillery. Gen. Middleton insists he will not wait at Humboldt for reinforcements, feed or forage, but if necessary will mount all the troops possible, and, with one gun, push on to Batoches, which is ninety-one and one-half miles from the present camp, and three days of forced march from Humboldt.

Sentenced by Court Martial.

The court martial which met at Fort Walla Walla for the trial of Lieut. William C. Muhlenburg, Second infantry, has presented its findings. The court sentenced Muhlenburg to suspension of rank and command for six months, to be confined to the garrison, to be reprimanded in orders, and further to forfeit $50 of each month's pay for six months. This last clause of the findings relating to the forfeiture of a portion of his pay Gen. Miles has disapproved. Muhlenberg was tried for conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman in sending some offensive dispatch concerning leave of absence to Secretary of War Lincoln, reflecting on his commanding officer, Maj. Leslie Smith, and for failing to pay some long standing debts, some of them gambling debts.

A Des Moines, Iowa, Sensation.

Great excitement was caused in Des Moines by Mrs. J. Gould, wife of a leading restaurateur, attempting to revenge fancied insults from Dr. Colvin, by attacking him with a horsewhip as he was leaving his office about 6 o'clock. The woman's husband pinioned the doctor's arms while she struck two or three blows. Dr. Colvin freed himself, and grasping the whip threw it into the street and pushed the woman off the sidewalk, which ended the fracas. The doctor has been the assaulting party's family physician until recently, and Mrs. Gould fancied he had been making remarks derogatory to her character. All the parties are prominent there.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. Blaine will give up the Windom house in June and will go to his home in Augusta.

The president has appointed Andrew J. Gross to be United States marshal for the district of Kentucky.

Secretary Whitney received the following telegram from Admiral Jouett: "I have crossed the Isthmus. Good order continues. Our men all sound and comfortable."

Joseph W. Nichol, Indianapolis, Ind., has been appointed law clerk of the postoffice department, vice John A. Henry, resigned. Mr. Nichol is a brother-in-law of ex-Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, of the United States senate.

A published report that the president contemplates an extended Western trip this summer is entirely without foundation. At the White House it is asserted that it would be impossible for the president to take a trip in any direction more extensive than his customary fishing tour in New York state.

The statement of the condition of the national banks of the country on March 20 showed that the gold certificates and coin held by the banks has increased $27,000,000 in less than thirty months. This indication of the hoarding of gold occasions considerable comment in the treasury department.

Commodore Schley, of the bureau of equipment and recruiting, left Washington recently for New York and Newport, on business connected with the bureau. At Newport he will meet and inspect the training squadron, which sailed from Norfolk on Monday.

At the postoffice department they are getting ready to issue a new postage stamp. It is to be used by newspapers, the postage of which has been reduced from two cents to one cent a pound. The stamps will be of the same general character as the series now in existence, which ranged from 2 to 10 cent denomination. The reduction of newspaper postage goes into effect on the first of July next.

The president appointed the following postmasters at presidential offices: F. M. Householder, at Noblesville, Ind., vice J. K. Fisher, resigned; J. S. Catherwood, at Hoopertown, vice Dale Wallace, resigned; Alex McKinnon, at Crookston, Minn., vice Delos Jacobus, resigned; E. R. Jacoby, Clyde, Kans., vice A. Connforth, resigned; George H. Tracy, Wilbur, Neb., vice Horace Cole, commission expired.

Secretary Lamar says that he is willing to be understood, with the utmost distinctness, to mean what he says when he declares that the cattlemen must leave Oklahoma. His interview with Capt. Couch was not, it seems, given as wide publicity as desired. Just as soon as can be done the cattlemen will be notified in the proper way, and with sufficient manifestation of force to convince them that what is said is meant.

William Hayden Edwards, chief of the diplomatic bureau of the state department, has resigned that position in order to accept an appointment as private secretary to Mr. Bell, the United States minister to the Netherlands. Sidney Everett, son of the late Edward Everett, has been appointed to fill the vacancy in the state department. Mr. Everett has been for some years secretary of the United States legation at Berlin.

The clerical forces are accomplishing more work than ever before in the memory of man. There is a general understanding that the clerks who will come out ahead are those who have their work up to date, and who understand and attend to their business. President Cleveland has got an idea that never entered into the head of any of his predecessors, that a day's work in the departments should mean a disposition of the routine business of the day. He does not believe that clerks should be engaged on correspondence a year or a month old.

THE CASUALTY RECORD.

The whole establishment of the Buffalo Express newspaper was burned.

Thieves robbed the grist mill of Charles Hillard in Salisbury township, Pa., and set fire to the building, which, with its contents, was completely destroyed. Loss heavy. The Welsh mountain gang are believed to be the perpetrators.

A little son of Mrs. O. L. Carr, at Mitchellville, Iowa, applied a match to some gasoline spilled upon the floor, as he had seen his father do. The can caught fire and exploded. Mrs. Carr will probably die of the burns, while the boy and his sister will escape.

PERSONAL MENTION.

The income of Miss Mary Packer of Mauch Chunk, Penn., who was recently married to Mr. Charles Cummings of New York, is estimated to be $1,000 per day.

Last Thursday Gen. Grant walked into the library, passed into the hall and called to Harrison. The servant did not respond and Gen. Grant, cane in hand, walked down stairs and into the dining room, where the family were at lunch. Each member arose at once with exclamations of glad surprise. A place was made at the table for the general and he seated himself. Then calling a servant, the general, with a twinkle in his eye, sent word to Dr. Douglas that the entire family was awaiting his coming to lunch. The doctor came down at once. "I got the best of you," remarked the general, as Dr. Douglas entered the dining room. A merry chat followed, during which Gen. Grant was helped to cold mutton. He cut the meat very fine and ate it.

The London Times in an editorial argues that it is impossible to ignore the Penjdeh incident without throwing the ameer into the arms of Russia. "The government," it says, "must take account not only of the arguments of European diplomats, but of the state of feeling in India and the engagements of the Ameer. The responsibility of giving Russia the full benefit of accomplished facts on the frontier would be heavy indeed, and possibly in regard to one part of the matter we may not be entirely our own master."

The Vienna Telegraph publishes a dispatch from Vienna which states that De Giers has telegraphed Baron de Stael at London as follows: I am charged by the czar's personal command to request you to inform the English government that, in the czar's opinion, war would be most deplorable to both countries; also that the czar hopes that a prompt and simple arrangement of the present difficulties may be established. Stael telegraphed De Giers in reply that the English government gladly accepted his communication.

CRIMES AND CRIMINALS.

James Bachner, general superintendent of the Geneva Watch company at Chicago, has been arrested on the charge of bigamy.

Eight women of Weston, W. Va., went to the house of a widow, Mrs. Dodson, at midnight seized her and pitched her into the icy river, from which she struggled out, barely escaping drowning.

Vessels of all nationalities are crowding into the Black sea for the purpose of transporting grain from the Russian ports before an outbreak shall occur between Russia and England. Eighty-seven English vessels arrived in one week. The porte has notified the reserves to hold themselves in readiness for immediate service.

The report is abroad that the Edmonton Mon. gang of horse thieves and desperadoes have threatened the life of Chief Justice Wade and a few days ago on his stage journey from Townsend to White Sulpher Springs to hold court he was attended by the sheriff of Meagher county and a strong posse of deputies. The route is thirty-five miles over a mountain country which is the haunt of the gang. Their resentment against Judge Wade is due to the fact that he sent two of their number to the penitentiary for very long terms.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

Mary Anderson's cottage at Long Branch was sold recently, on account of her absence abroad, for $17,400, to W. Jones, an agent for a wealthy merchant of New York.

The Adams & Westlake Manufacturing company shut down its works, throwing 800 men out of employment.

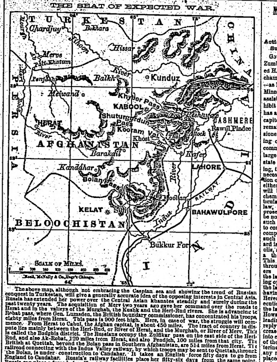
Receiver Howlett, of the Yakima, Wash. land office, writes that when the Northern Pacific railroad makes its "selection" in that section, which will be in a few weeks, the country will boom, and his office reach a maximum grade.

THE SEAT OF EXPECTED WAR.



The above map, although not embracing the Caspian sea and showing the trend of Russian conquest in Turkestan, will give a generally accurate idea of the opposing interests in Central Asia. Russia has extended her power over the Central Asian khanates steadily and surely during the past twenty years. The acquisition of Merv two years ago gave her command over the roads to Herat and in the valleys of the Murghab, the Kushk and the Heri-Rud rivers. She is advancing to Robat pass, where Gen. Lumsden, the British boundary commissioner, has concentrated his troops, eighty miles from Herat. This pass is 900 feet high. Here, in case of war, the struggle will commence. From Herat to Cabul, the Afghan capital, is about 450 miles. The tract of country in dispute lies mainly between the Heri-Rud, or River of Herat, and the Murghab, or River of Merv. This is called the Badghis district. The Russians occupy the Zulfikar pass on the east side of the Heri-Rud, and also Ak-Robat, 120 miles from Herat, and also Pendjeh, 100 miles from that city. The British at Quettah, beyond the Bolan pass in Southern Afghanistan, are 514 miles from Herat. The railroad connecting with the Indus Valley railway, by which troops may be sent to Quettah, through the Bolan, is under construction to Candahar. It takes an English force fifty days to go from England to Candahar. Russia's railway facilities place her fifty-six days from the same point. Russia can place a force before Herat in only thirty-two days from Odessa, on the Black sea, and it would take England fifty-one days to reach Herat from Kurrachee, the seaport where the Indus Valley railway begins. The advantage, of course, in time is with the Russians. The Indian railways, however, extend to Rawul-Pindee, east of the Khyber pass, through which troops may be marched to Cabul, and by the caravan road from Cabul to Herat in six or seven weeks. The anxiety of the Indian military authorities to have an advance ordered is easily explicable. The Russians are on the inside track in the race to Herat.

GRANT GAINING.

What the [illegible] Says About the Situation—Com[illegible]ensive Medical Statement.

Gen. Grant gained much in the earlier part of last week. On Wednesday Dr. Newman said: "Gen. Grant is very much better. He conversed readily with those around him, and seems to be quite cheerful and happy. He is getting dressed in his trousers and vest and dressing gown. There is a great improvement in his condition. The color of the skin is different. He looks like a healthy man. He is buoyed up by faith. The prayers of the people of the whole country—of Protestants, of Catholics and of Hebrews—have been offered up for him, and they are being answered. The general now believes he will get well. He feels, and I feel, that the supplications of so many millions of people for such a consummation will be answered. There is a grand chance, I think, of the general getting well again. I have not seen the physicians, and cannot say that they share my views. His improvement may be credited particularly to the power of mind over matter. To-day, as I parted from him, he pressed my hand and said: 'Thrice have I been in the valley of the shadow of death, and thrice have I come out again.'"

A COMPREHENSIVE STATEMENT.

That the public may be enabled to thoroughly understand the case as it is and form reliable opinions, the following absolute facts are given as a basis for public and personal judgment:

The general is not greatly emaciated about the body, he has lost some flesh, but how much can not be told, as he has not been weighed in some time. His face is not much changed, but it has a careworn expression. The glandular swelling has at no time been larger than a hen's egg, and from that down to the size of a pigeon's egg. It is located at the angle of the right jaw. It has never entirely disappeared since it came, months ago. The swelling is due first to irritation of the growth and finally to the progress of disease in the glands themselves. There is no positive evidence at present that the glands have become actively diseased though the presumption is that they are diseased; the disease does not extend to nor affect any of the processes of the general's ear. There is some danger of that—a possibility, but not a probability. At present it is not going in that direction. The disease is spreading very gradually backward in the back part of the throat and behind the palate. It has communicated somewhat to the back part of the nose, in front of and above the palate. There is no lump on the tongue. It is a small ulcer, away back on the side of the tongue. It has never been shown to its whole extent, but it is a small ulcer, irregular in shape and from a quarter to a half-inch in diameter. In case of epitheliama there is no lump; it is an ulcer. There is a discharge from the ulcerated surface, composed of mucus, broken-down tissue and some little matter; in other words it is muco-pus. This exudes from an ulcerated surface that includes the palate, the back part of the throat and right side of the tongue. There is a chance for the general improvement of the patient by the temporary arrest of the disease. The atmosphere of mountains or the West would in fair weather, be better than the salt air of the seabord. In all concerous cases of the throat there are complications of irritation about the throat, which should be called accidents of the disease, and it is these camplications that have given trouble, rather than the steady progress of the disease. In this case the complications are swelling of the throat, increase of inflammation, spasms, hemorrhage and increased flow of mucus.

THE TREATMENT.

Six drops or minims of morphia are given each twenty-four hours, just enough to control the pain and induce sleep. Without morphia, the pain would at times be unbearable. The general takes for food one to two tumblerfuls, of a mixture of beef extract and egg and milk every two to four hours, night and day. He relished a little clam broth yesterday as much as he relishes anything. The general usually reclines in the chair attired in knitted underwear, on his feet knitted wool moccasins, a brown dressing gown trimmed with silk and belted with a heavy cord. Over his lap is spread a silk and satin quilt filled with down, while upon his head he wears a silk cap, which he has long worn to protect his head from attacks of neuralgia.

The Prince of Wales Mobbed at Cork.

Cork Special: John H. Connor, Nationalist member of parliament from Tipperary, marched at the head of the procession of national leaguers, who closely followed the royal procession, and sang "God Save Ireland" every time the loyal bands started up "God Save the Queen" or "God Save the Princess." The Prince betrayed some feeling when he replied to the address presented by the magistrate. As the open carriage containing the prince was crossing Parnell bridge some one in the crowd threw an onion at his royal highness. The missile missed the prince but hit one of the footmen behind the carriage and the crowd cheered. During the afternoon a detective arrested a rowdy who was throwing stones at the loyalists. A mob speedily formed and attempted to rescue the prisoner. The detective fired his revolver, but without hitting any one, and succeeded in taking his prisoner to a police court, when he was promptly released on bail furnished by the mayor of Cork. Early in the evening the Nationalists held a mass meeting, where inflammatory speeches were made and the latest London newspapers containing accounts of the royal progress were burned in bonfire. After the mass meeting the Nationalists scattered through the city in parties numbering from fifty to five hundred men. Doors and windows were smashed, flags and decorations were torn down and heaped upon the blazing bonfires, and many gun stores were broken into for the purpose of arming the mob. Policemen, when encountered singly or in small squads, were attacked and beaten unmercifully with their own truncheons. In many cases the police rallied and charged desperately upon the mob, but were invariably surrounded and repulsed. The police then resorted to a free use of their revolvers and bayonets. It was hand-to-hand fighting of the most desperate sort, the police standing back to back, and receiving and inflicting terrible injuries. At midnight the streets were practically in possession of the mob.

Intentions of the Riel Rebels.

Winnipeg Special: The position of affair at Prince Albert will be seen from the following statement of John Brown of Prince Albert, who eluded the rebels and reached here. He said that Riel did not intend fighting at the commencement of the rebellion, although he was fully prepared for war, as he was under the impression that the government would bow to the wishes of the half-breeds. Now that the first shot has been fired, Mr. Brown is of the opinion that there will be some hot work before the war is ended. The rebels vow that they will fight to the last, and are fully equipped for the occasion. At the time Mr. Brown left his home Riel had over 600 half-breeds and Indian followers, and anticipated help from the Sioux and other bands of Indians who have since joined him.

"Riel told me himself," said Mr. Brown, "that he expected help from nearly all the Indians, and I have no doubt but what he will get it, as they are greatly dissatisfied with the manner in which the government has allowed them to starve. Riel has runners all over the country, and news is carried back and forth among the different camps almost as quick as you get messages by wire."

Beside the help already mentioned, Mr. Brown said that Riel counted on one hundred cowboys and half-breeds from Montana.

The Hudson's Bay company recently received a dispatch from their officer at Prince Albert, dated the 11th inst. General Middleton, the dispatch indicates, will soon reach Clarke's Crossing, if he does not encounter rebels before getting there. He will then proceed on to Batoche's Crossing, twenty-three miles up the Saskatchewan. If no resistance is offered, Middleton will make a dash across the country from Batoche to Prince Albert, which he thinks he can reach in a short time.

Oklahoma Boomers Get a Set Back.

A Washington paper prints an interview between Capt. Couch, the leader of the Oklahoma "boomers," and the secretary of the interior, with regard to the Oklahoma lands, in the course of which Secretary Lamar said, regarding the course of the administration: "I will state to you the policy of this administration with regard to this Oklahoma country. It considers the Oklahoma territory on which the persons you represent are proposing to make settlements, as within and a part of the Indian territory. The administration regards it as not a part of the public domain open to entry and settlement and the acquisition of titles under the land laws of the United States, being Indian country; that is, territory acquired and reserved for Indian occupancy. The government is pledged to the protection of it and the security of the Indians from intruders. No white persons have a right to go there and reside without a permit, and when they do go they are intruders who are acting illegally and wrongfully. The policy of the president is to execute the pledge of the government and protect this territory from the intrusion of white persons, who claim that they have a right to enter upon it and that it was public domain, subject to pre-emption and homestead or settlement." "Is this the final decision?" asked Capt. Couch. "It is and will be enforced," replied Mr. Lamar. In reply to a further question, Secretary Lamar said the administration was determined that the cattle men on the Oklahoma reservation should leave. They will not be permitted to graze their cattle within the limits of the territory. He repeated this declaration with emphasis.

The Hazen Court Martial.

Washington Special: The findings of the Hazen court were handed to Secretary Endicott about two weeks ago, on the eve of his departure for Boston. He locked them up until his return, but final action by him is looked for every day. A reprimand is expected. The trial, whatever the verdict may be, bids fair to reopen the question of responsibility for the disaster to the Greely party as well as lead to an effort to improve by legislation our present system of court martial procedure. Gen. Hazen and his friends will make a determined effort as soon as congress meets next December to have a joint congressional committee investigate the whole arctic matter. While Gen. Hazen feels totally indifferent as to the findings of the recent court martial, it is said that he will appeal to the president for a new trial should they be adverse. Whether acquitted or not his counsel, Judge Mackey, intends to publish the trial in book form.

Important Military Changes.

An order has been issued at the war department assigning Assistant Adjt. Gen. Thomas M. Vincent to duty as adjutant general of the department of Dakota at Fort Snelling, Minn., instead of the department of the Platte, at Omaha. Assistant Adjt. Gen. Samuel Breck is ordered to Omaha from Fort Snelling. Gen. Absalom Baird is detached from duty at the war department and ordered as inspector general of the division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago. Lieut. Col. Hughes is ordered to the division of the Pacific, with headquarters at San Francisco. Maj. Heyl is ordered to the department of Texas, with headquarters at San Antonio, and Maj. Burton is ordered to the department of Missouri, with headquarters at Fort Leavenworth.

The Isthmus Trouble Ended.

Admiral Jouett telegraphed Secretary Whitney, from Colon, as follows: "The situation of the isthmus is unchanged. Trains run across regularly without molestation."

It is the general opinion among officers on duty that the marines who were recently sent from New York will leave Aspinwall on their return home in the next two weeks. Admiral Jouett telegraphs that trains now run across regularly without molestation. Officers of the marines apprehend no further difficulty, and say it is useless to keep so large a force on the isthmus unless the rebels show signs of continuing their devastations. Should the marines return, Admiral Jouett will have a force of about 600 men to protect Americans and American interests.

MINNESOTA NEWS CONDENSED.

BOGUS BUTTER.

Actions of Minnesota Legislature On the Subject—Work of the Commissioners.

Gov. Hubbard appointed W. C. Rice of Zumbrota commissioner and the latter selected H. C. Howard of Lake Crystal—an ardent champion of the law before the late legislature—as his assistant. Mr. Rice is secretary of the Minnesota Butter and Cheese association, and assistant secretary of the state dairy exhibit at New Orleans. The commissioner has an office in the the third story of the capitol. The commissioner, Mr. Rice, will remain at Zumbrota; the assistant commissioner, Mr. Howard and the secretary having charge of the office at the capitol. The commissioner or assistant will visit every large dairy market and manufactory in the state and every section interested in dairying, two or three times a year, or oftener if necessary, and make a thorough investigation of butter and milk. If any quantity of either appears at all impure or adulterated it will be seized and subjected to a thorough chemical analysis. If it prove in any particular to come under the proscription of the law, the manufacturer or dealer will be prosecuted accordingly. There will, of course, be no regular time for visiting each city, as such a system would enable prominent dealers to conceal their bogus stock. If at any time complaint of adulterated products is recieved, such will be at once investigated. Mr. Howard is now inspecting the markets of Minneapolis, and will spend the next fort-night in a thorough inspection of the dual cities. This completed, he will continue the work throughout the state. The commissioners announce their intention to enforce the law to the letter. They delayed commencing operations immediately on the approval of the law, so as to work no injustice to dealers having a large supply of butterine on hand. Hereafter, however, their inspection and prosecution will be rigorous. The moral effect of the law has already been very marked. Mr. Howard said that he had interrogated several leading dealers in St. Paul, and the invariable reply was that their sales of butter had increased at least 300 per cent since the law went into effect. In Minneapolis, Anthony Kelly, one of the largest dealers, had recalled all the butterine he had out, and refused to touch any more. Mr. Howard visited a number of places in Minneapolis and found that the butterine, exposed for sale when he had visited there sometime ago had all disappeared. He visited the St. Paul market house and found no butterine. So far as he could ascertain, all dealers in this state are disposed to obey the dictates of the law. He was informed, however, that Fairbanks, Armour & Co., the greatest butterine and oleomargarine manufacturers of Chicago, intend to test the constitutionality of the law next fall, on the ground that their butterine is a wholesome product. Mr. Howard believes it will be very easy for the commission to prove the stuff deleterious to health, and the law therefore authorized.

DIGEST OF THE NEW LAW.

No person shall offer for sale any unclean, impure, unhealthy, adulterated or unwholesome milk, or any article of food made therefrom. Pure skim cheese made from milk adulterated only by skimming is excepted. No person shall keep cows for the production of milk for sale in a crowded or unhealthy condition; nor feed them unhealthy food; nor manufacture any article of food from unhealthy or impure milk. No person shall sell or bring to be manufactured to any butter or cheese manufactory any milk diluted with water or in any way unclean or impure, or milk from which any cream has been taken (except as above) or shall keep back any part of the milk known as "strippings" or supply sour milk to the manufactories. Manufacturers must keep an account of all milk daily received and of the number of pounds and packages of butter and cheese made daily and disposed of daily, open to the inspection of any person delivering milk there. No person shall manufacture of any oleaginous substance, or of any compound other than that produced from unadulterated milk or cream, any article designated to take the place of butter and cheese produced from pure milk. No person shall offer for sale in full packages, butter or cheese with a false brand or label of county or state where it is made. No person shall manufacture or sell condensed milk, unless put up in packages distinctly labeled, and unless made from fresh, pure, healthy and unadulterated milk, unskimmed, and unless the proportion of milk solids in the condensed milk be equal to 12 per cent. of milk solids in crude milk, and of such solids 2.5 per cent. must be fat. The law further provides for a commissioner and assistants, who shall have access to all factories, farms, etc., used in the manufacture and sale of dairy products, and shall have power to open any package, can or vessel and inspect the contents. District and municipal courts are given the necessary jurisdiction over cases under the act. Milk shown to contain more than 88 per cent. of water and fluids, or less than 12 per cent. of milk solids, of which not less than 3 per cent. is fat, shall be declared adultrated; and milk drawn from cows within fifteen days before and five days after parturition, or from animals fed on unhealthy food, shall be declared unclean and impure. The act provides for various fines and imprisonments, ranging from $25 to $500, and from fifteen days to one year.

Minnesota Laws Interpreted.

The attorney general has prepared several opinions in answer to inquiries from officials in different parts of the state. A. M. Sperry, county superintendent of schools for Dodge county, enquires whether teachers have the right to dismiss vicious children from a school without waiting for the report of the trustees, as provided by the code. The attorney general is of the opinion that teachers can undoubtedly dismiss children of this class when the disipline of the school requires it, but the case should at once be reported to the trustees. He cites a decision of Judge Lyon in the case of The State vs. Burton, 45 Wis., 150, 155, in support of his opinion. Another county superintendent of schools desires to know if he can hold a commission as notary public and still retain his position of superintendent, to which the attorney general returns a brief affirmative answer. The county attorney of Wabasha county writes that, in as much as section 50 of chapter 11, General Statutes of 1878, as amended by the first legislature, provides that "if delinquent personal property tax is not paid on demand, the sheriff shall distrain sufficient goods belonging to the delinquent, etc.," he would like to have the attorney general's opinion whether a demand is necessary before the sheriff can resort to a distraint; and if so, what is to be done in the case of persons moving from one county to another, or to another state, owing personal tax or having personal property in a county of which they are not residents. In answer the attorney general says a demand is absolutely necessary; that when parties have left a county and moved to another part of the state, the case is provided for in sections 63 and 64 of the statute, and that in case of a removal of a party owning personal property to another state, there is no way at present to collect the tax. Mr. Hahn is also asked to give his opinion whether under section 17, chapter 120, General Statutes, of 1878, a county which has in its jail prisoners of another county, can charge more than $4 per week, which is allowed by law for their board, if bedding, medical attendance, etc., is furnished the prisoners. In reply the attorney general says that, By section 19 it is made the duty of the sheriff to furnish everything that would seem to be necessary to the comfort or physical health of a prisoner (other than such as it is his duty to provide in return for the weekly compensation allowed him) at the expense of the county. Under this section he is inclined to believe that the sheriff would be authorized to provide necessary bedding, clothing and fuel, and medical aid, for prisoners from another county, and would have a valid claim therefor against the county from which such prisoners are received.

During the last half of her sickness no attempt was made to give her food, but water only. Cancer of the stomach is the supposed cause of her death. She was the merest skeleton, being emaciated beyond anything the local doctors had ever heard or read of.

It was insured for $6,000 in the Ætna of Hartford. The contents were insured for $500. The residence of Samuel Judd at that place was recently burned, and it is suspected that both residences were fired by certain creditors of Walker, Judd & Veazie, who think that the private property of the firm should have been included in the list of assets. JOURNAL.

ck over the eight years mber closes it does not hat THE JOURNAL is eight y,—so brief seems the decade and yet how ms! But what great events spired in that brief time! HE JOURNAL entered upon its , a little six column folio, one- rinted over one hundred miles Crookston and the other half 300, ston was a mere hamlet, con- g not over 150 souls and the total tion of Polk County could now heltered and fed in the Crookston to-day. This was in the spring of 1877. Coming to this city in 1878 and thereafter printed and published here the city of Crookston, THE JOURNAL has seen this little city grow and thrive until she is one of the most flourishing ities of the Valley with a busines eputation second to none, and the county has kept pace in due ratio. We have seen its crops grow from a few ousands of bushels of wheat into illions annually. We have seen her ive stock interests increase from nothing into one of the best stock-growing counties of the State—and when we say best we do not mean best as to the amount of stock now raised but more strictly speaking as to QUALITY. She as not as many cattle, horses, sheep nd hogs as many older counties but she has a most excellent start in the quality of those she has, for she has representatives of almost every known breed of thorough-breds among cattle; she has Berkshires, Poland Chinas, Chester Whites and Duroc, or Jersey Reds, among swine; Southdown sheep; Norman Percheron and many other esirable breeds among horses, and it by no means an idle boast to say that within the next decade the effects of these thorough-bred animals will be manifested in as fine flocks and herds as any county in the State can boast. THE JOURNAL has ever faithfully endeavored to watch over the varied and important interests of this large county and while it has sometimes erred it has always diligently striven to subserve the best interests of its patrons and the county it represents. If it has made some enemies it is not urprising; that it has made many arm friends our large and constantly wing subscription list attests in a nner truly gratifying to us. It has en our intention to change our size an eight column folio with the beginning of Volume 9 but owing to circumstances beyond our control we hall not be able to make the change immediately. We have however many new features by which we expect to make THE JOURNAL more of a household necessity than it ever has been, and among these we have made arrangments to present, from time to time cuts of some of the best thorough-bred animals in existence. Recognizing the fact that our great county is adapted to something besides simply wheat-raising we shall endeavor to give our readers all the aid in our power to enable them to choose such stock as shall best be adapted to their needs. We desire at this time to return our sincere thanks to our many readers for their hearty support, knowing well that the trying vicissitudes incident to the settlement of a new country has ade it up hill work for many of them o contribute to the support of a newspaper. We appreciate their kindness nd shall do our best to merit their nfidence and patronage. While they ve already done much for us we would like it if each one would be instrumental in adding one new name to ur list as we would like very much to ouble our list in this year and thus e able to do far better for our county nd city.

About Ourself.

is is our eighth birth day we pardoned if we say more about self than seemeth consistent with the well-known modesty of all newspaper men. We wish to say to our readers that we have been putting in ood, honest work for them and when e commenced printing an all at home seven column folio, with supplement, we did just what we promised to do . e. we printed THE JOURNAL,

ALL AT HOME

We have sometimes added a supplement, in times of important county election, during the sessions of Congress or the State Legislature and this supplement we have obtained through the best agency for such business to be found in the United States. We have set all of the reading matter for the JOURNAL in the JOURNAL office although we could have done what many a (so-called) "all-at-home" sheet has done i. e. we could have bought stereotyped matter at far less then the cost to us of setting our own matter and palmed it off on our readers as "all at home" matter! Another thing, too, we have done and that is to hold our advertising rates equal to everybody. We see in some of our exchanges foreign advertisement appear on terms of loving intimacy with advertisements of home merchants and other advertisers and we know that the foreign ads go in at sometimes the rates the paper charges its merchant and other home advertisers. We have had hundreds of these advertisements offered us and will never accept them save on just such terms as our home rtisers pay us. If we should allow eign advertises space at one-fourth e rates we charge home advertisers we should expect every home advertiser to go back on us at once and we should richly deserve such a fate. Another thing we have been particular to exclude every advertisement for which we could not vouch, and we have never admitted into our home columns an advertisement of any fraudulent scheme, lottery or any quack of what kind soever. We are led here to say that this applies only to our home columns as we did not control the advertising space in the supplement wholly and this is the only obnoxious feature of the supplement plan. The policy that we have thus briefly outlined we shall continue to pursue as we wish THE JOURNAL to be in every particular, upright, sober, honest and reliable.

On our first page will be seen a picture of some grade Friesian calves, the living embodiment of which may be seen on the farm of Wilcox & Leggett, Benson, Minn., or the Northwestern Stock Breeder's farm at Kirkhoven. They look no better than those we saw upon this latter farm in August 1884. The Dutch Friesians, (or Holsteins as they are sometimes improperly called) are coming to the front as a dairy cow in America while in Holland, their native heath, they have long been celebrated as butter cows. Instances have recently been given wherein they rival the best of the Jersey cows as butter makers. At the Onendaga County Fair at Syracuse, N. Y., in the fall of 1883 the first prize for the best package of not less than 20 pounds of dairy butter was awarded to the Lakeside Herd, Friesians, or Holsteins. This is claimed to be the best county fair in the State of New York, in the very heart of the dairy district, and the competition is said to have been very sharp several noted Jersey, Guernsey and Ayrshire herds being in competition. The butter was all judged solely upon its merits, the maker's name being withheld, and great was the consternation among the representatives of the other herds when it was found that the Dutch Friesians had captured the prize. As a general purpose cow they beat the world. They weigh equally as heavy as the best beef breeds and on ordinary fare will yield from 60 to 75 pounds of milk per day, while they have been made to yield 90 lbs per day by judicious feeding. That they are the coming cow for the farmer who does not believe in putting his eggs all in one basket, or in other words who desires to obtain the best breed for general purposes, is becoming a well established fact. The Jerseys, beyond question, are excellent butter cows, but the males, owing to their small size are almost worthless for beef. So with the Ayrshires and Guernseys, while the noble Dutch Friesian cow not only matches these celebrated butter makers in their golden products but when she has thrice paid her owner in milk and butter and is ready for the shambles her carcass for beef will bring as much as a dozen Jersey cows or more. Our readers can obtain all the information they desire by addressing Maj. A. G. Wilcox, Minneapolis, or the farm at Benson, Minn.

Amber cane is said to be better feed for milch cows than sowed corn, in fact fact it is said to be the best forage crop in the world for horses, cattle, sheep and pigs. It contains more sugar and consequently more fat-producing qualities than any other feed, green or dry. Coming as it does at a season when natural grasses are all dried up renders it peculiarly valuable for dairymen.

NATIVE STOCK.

There is a class of old farmers who cling to old ideas and methods and fashions, says the New Hampshire Mirror and Farmer. They long for the "old-fashioned" sheep; declare that the old "native cow" is the best they ever had; that common hens are the best layers, and so on. Now perhaps it would be an eye-opener for them to start out and try to find a cow, sheep, hog or even a hen that had not some of the blood of one or more of the new and improved breeds. In many instances, all kinds of stock are bred carelessly, whatever is the nearest being used, or, on account of some point or color in the individual, without asking what the breed is, a selection is made. But the fact still remains that the blood is there. A good strain is scattered far and wide, and often gets into the hands of persons who know nothing about it, and call it "native." Several strains of improved blood may be combined in one animal, so that it is hard to distinguish either, and natives get the credit for all the good there is. Let farmers think this thing over, and see if they are not working against their own interest in decrying blooded stock, even if they cannot buy it.

There has been exported from Polk County out of the crop of 1884, something over 2,000,000 bushels of wheat. Should the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad raise the price of wheat one cent per bushel, it would add $20,000 to the revenues of the county. Should Polk County bond herself for $200,000 at 5 per cent for 30 years, the interest would be $10,000, which taken from the $20,000 additional revenues stated above would leave $10,000 each year for a sinking fund to help pay the bonds which, in 17 years would liquidate the debt, and before the 30 years for which the bonds are issued will give a credit to the railroad of over $200,000.

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

"Because—"

Some drink to make them wide awake,
And some to make them sleep;
Some drink because they merry are,
And some because they weep.
Some drink because they're very hot,
and some because they're cold,
Some drink to cheer them when they're young,
And some because they're old,
Some drink to give them appetite,
And some to aid digestion;
Some for "doctors say it's right;"
And some without a question.
Some drink when they a bargain make,
And some because of loss;
Some drink when they their pleasure take,
And others when they're cross.
Some drink for sake of company,
While others drink more sly;
And many drink, but never think
About the reason why.

—Boston Globe.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt have corrupted themselves." And Moses went down from the mount and found them worshipping a golden calf. Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp and said, "Who is on the Lord's side? Let him to me." Verily OUR PEOPLE have corrupted themselves. Our law-makers have sold themselves to the rum power. Truly, when we consider this age of reason and age of boasted Christian civilization, and then read the daily calendar of crime caused by the whiskey trafic, it makes our blood run cold. Surely there must be great weakness somewhere, and Christian people must be either blind or indifferent to the cause or they would be up and doing something to stay the tide of this great evil which is filling our land with poverty, crime and shame. Surely the responsibility must rest somewhere! Let no one think that he does not bear a share of it. Is the man who can abstain from the intoxicating cup to make no effort to save his fellow brother? But you say "Am I my brother's keeper? Am I responsible for others?" Yes! The voice of your brother's blood cries unto God from the ground. But here the question is often asked: What shall we do? How can we save them? The only consistent and effectual way is to deny yourself and stop putting the temptation in his way. But you say: This is a free country. We have a right to eat and drink what we like, and no one has a right to interfere with our personal liberty; Yes, so long as your personal liberty does not infringe upon the rights of others. But when a man uses his liberty to tyranize over his wife and children, and bring crime, pauperism and disease upon the community, then the state has a right to interfere. And not only has it a right, but it is the DUTY of the state to protect the innocent and helpless and to prevent crime, pauperism and disease. But how does the state protect the innocent and helpless? Perchance when the mischief is done, by giving them a place in the poor house, asylum or state prison—to that extent do our laws as they now are, protect innocence, prevent pauperism and crime, and to no other extent. But you say: "We have a law which prohibits selling to the drunkard." What a beautiful law! Just think of it! A law that allows one man to make a physical wreck of another, and, when the drunkard is at the very brink of ruin, and at death's door, says, "Stop!" when the poor wretch, with his shattered nerves and delerious brain has no power to stop, and so will, if he cannot get it himself, get some friend to get it for him. This friendly action, however, is hardly ever necessary, as the saloon keeper is not so scrupulous about keeping the law. And for proof of this assertion, we can find plenty of such cases right here in our own city. But if it is right to prohibit saloon keepers from selling to the drunkard, would it not be more sensible to prohibit them from making more drunkards? Surely, a man is worth more to his family, his friends and the community before he becomes a drunkard, than after, to say nothing of the sorrow and misery he brings upon others while the habit is fastening itself upon him. If it is desirable, as stated in the Pioneer Press, to have one State on earth free from this curse, how much more would it be to have our whole land free from the contaminating influence of this traffic. To that end let us work and pray, mothers, wives, sisters and friends of the cause, and the day shall not be far distant when saloon keepers and politicians in their avarice shall tremble under the righteous indignation of an outraged people, and Minnesota shall ring with the glad shouts of prohibition.

DIO LEWIS IN IOWA.

The prohibitory law in Iowa has been in force since July 4th. From the first this law has had several features quite favorable to its enforcements. It is a stringent law which makes not only the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks criminal, but also the giving away for a consideration, the keeping with intent to sell, the building or keeping a house in which to sell, the sale to minors and men intoxicated as well as men who are in the habit of drinking to intoxication, and it makes intoxication itself a misdemeanor. The law imposes heavy penalties; for intoxication ten dollars; for manufacturing, two hundred dollars for the first offense, and five hundred dollars for every subsequent offense; for selling not less than fifty dollars for the first, and for every subsequent offense not less than three hundred dollars. This law makes the importation of intoxicating drinks a criminal offense. In keeping with this all our principal railroad lines with commendable promptness prohibited shipments. Another favorable circumstance for the law in Iowa is our State Temperance Alliance, organized in every county and many townships of each county in the State for the purpose of enforcement. It is virtually one great law and order league with representative organizations all over the State.

But how does the law work? We live twenty-five miles west of the Mississippi in a portion of the State where there is a large foreign population. A man with a team can make in one day a return trip to Wisconsin and clandestinely import a load of the coveted beverage. This immediate region, therefore, is hardly a fair test of what prohibition is doing in the larger portion of Iowa. But even here the law is at this time better enforced than the most sanguine of us had expected. In every town under 10,000 population the saloons are closed. The brewery in our town has closed up its business entirely. Four saloon keepers out of five have gone into other business. The fifth one has ostensibly closed. In some of our neighboring towns the change is even more complete. Of course liquors are imported and liquor is sold in these towns, but it is done so cautiously that it is almost impossible to get evidence. Habitual drunkards seldom get a drink and minors are not let into the secret, and the social custom of treating is hardly known. A man who employs on his farm continually from twelve to fifteen men mostly foreigners, tell me he can see a vast difference in his men since we have this law. These same men opposed bitterly its adoption, but now as they see the benefit of it upon their homes, speak favorably of it. Such you will find in every community. I could give you the names of men, and their statements to this effect.

So much for the operation of this law in this region, but in the interior of the State, especially in the rural districts, the showing is more favorable. Said a gentleman just the other day, a man who previous to the establishment of our law had an interest in two saloons, 'No one need tell me that prohibition does not prohibit; there is not one-tenth as much drinking in Iowa as there was before the adoption of this law. I have traveled over most of the States, and I know what I am talking about.'

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD, PRESIDENT N. W. C. T. U.

We are now witnessing the "great temperance set-back" so generally predicted by our Republican friends after the fateful 5th of last November. This retrograde movement was inaugurated by the Legislature of Oregon, which recently passed our Scientific Temperance Education bill, enacted a Local Option law and submitted a Prohibition Constitutional Amendment. It was followed up by Alabama's Local Option enactment and Scientific Temperance Education bill. This was succeeded by the passage of the same bill in Maine, Kansas and Nebraska, with one in modified form for New Jersey, Missouri and Wisconsin, while within the last week Pennsylvania has adopted the best bill for temperance education in the public schools of all the fourteen States now under that form of legislation; and Tennessee and Rhode Island have voted to submit the Prohibition amendment to the people—the last State doing this by unanimous vote of its Legislature.

Meanwhile, in Kansas the most iron-clad law known to the statute books has just gone into operation, carrying terror to the liquor interest, and in Iowa the recent decision of the Supreme Court has plaeed the long arm of the legal lever in the hands of the temperance people.

Note this statement from the Washington Sentinel—the Brewers' National organ, edited by their hired attorney, Louis Schade: "Indeed, we think that at no time have matters looked more gloomy than at present. (For whom? The BREWERS please take notice!) North, West and South the enemies of personal liberty are actively engaged in enslaving the people by high license laws with prohibition features, or by outright prohibition. Iowa and Kansas seem to be entirely subdued, and even here at Washington we have reason to look with apprehension into the future." In short, no winter's work compares with this in results, since the temperance reform came into being. A few more years of just such setting back and the millemium would be in sight.

To be sure, in many local elections this spring, Republicans have voted to legalize the liquor traffic "as a measure of retaliation upon the St. Johnites," thus showing how deep was their actual interest in prohibition, and making the issue more clear than ever to those who had looked for help from that quarter; but in spite of this bit of spitefulness, more than half the towns of Massachusetts declared against the liquor traffic, and the prohibition vote on the whole shows gains both East and West, while in the South, as I found on my return trip, a NON-SECTIONAL PARTY is far more popular than a NON-PARTIZIAN SOCIETY.

What brought this prohibition movement into the field in the Chicago local election? "The existing party competition for the liquor vote," Carter Harrison was "solid with the saloon element," Judge Sidney Smith was "entirely satisfactory to our German friends." One candidate posed before the voting population with a glass of whiskey as his emblem, the other with a mug of lager beer. Both parties were held by hoops—only one set was on a whiskey barrel and the other on a beer keg.

High License a Failure.

Ex-mayor Hardy, of Lincoln, Nebraska, who is said to be the father of the high license law of that State, gives the following testimony which should be read: "After six years experience under the high license law, there has been no improvement in our saloons, save in their numbers, which are less. Gambling and prosecution go hand in hand with them as before. There are the same stabbing and shooting, the same destitute families and ragged children. High license has done nothing toward waking up temperance sentiment. Drunkards have no trouble in getting liquor. The worst ones get drunk. Saloon keepers violate law, just as they always have, and none dare raise a finger to enforce the law."

GOOD ROADS.

A Brief Outline of what Polk County Has Done in the Past Two Years.

Grand Forks Plaindealer.

In the matter of good roads and draining Polk County, Minnesota, is a striking example for every county in the Red River Valley. It has done work which it should be proud of and which we hope our Dakota farmers will not be slow to copy. Polk County has made an effort to build a road on every section line, and as a result has about 2,900 miles of ditches which every person will at once see must drain the lands of the county.

Polk County, Minnesota, two and three years ago could not boast of a single mile of good road in any part of the county, but to-day we are pleased to know that Polk County contains more miles of road and ditches than any three counties in the Valley, all of which they accomplished with a very slight cost to the present settler. This they done by issuing bonds for from 5 to 20 years time for which the present settler pays only the interest which does not figure more than 70 to 80 cents a year on each quarter section of land within each township; the money raised from the sale of said bonds was used in the purchase of a New Era Road Grader, which grader we know from experience cannot be equalled by any known machine yet invented for the purpose of grading and ditching.

This machine is sold for the sum of $1,000 and handles at the rate of 1,000 to 1,500 cubic yards of earth per day, which amount will complete from one-third to one-half mile of good substantial road, at the same time leaving a large and regular ditch on either side of the grade which ditch leaves the road always dry and free from water at the same time carries off and completely drains the adjacent farms of the usual large amount of surface water coming from the snow and frosts as well as spring rains.

By so doing the farmers in the improved sections of Polk County have been able to seed from 23 to 30 days earlier than ever before. This as well as the much needed road throughout our several townships, certainly ought to be an example for our energetic farmers who usually are awake to any and all improvements which are beneficial to every one in Dakota whether farmers or merchants. Polk County has not only been benefitted by the use of those roads and ditches but it has caused a great portion of what seemed useless swamp lands to be cultivated and a good crop raised thereon.

Improved stock has solved the problem of how to make the farm pay. Raising such crops as can best be fed to stock, and to thus market our farm crops brings the best profit with the least labor. Prominent among such crops is grass. Let us have more grass pasturage; take better care of it; don't pasture it to death, give the grass a chance, and it will pay better than any other crop for the stock farmer. Many farmers in Polk County are realizing this fact and hence you see more and more good stock brought into the county every year.

Let a man resolve and determine that he will advance, and the first step of advancement is already made. The first step is half the battle. In the very fact of advancing himself, he is in the most effectual possible way of advancing others. He is giving them the most eloquent of all lessons—that of example; which teaches for more emphatically than words can teach. He is doing what others are by imitation incited to do. Beginning with himself, he is in the most emphatic manner teaching the duty of self-reform and of self-improvement; and if the majority of men acted as he did, how much wiser, how much happier, how much more prosperous, as a whole, would society become! For society being made up of units, will be happy and prosperous, or the reverse, exactly in the same degree as the respective individuals who compose it.

D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, and recorded as a mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained, in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 17th day of September A. D. 1884, at 11:20 o'clock a. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 519, which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof in case of such default to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the amount of fifty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents, being the amount secured to be paid and still unpaid, together with the sum of two and 80-100 dollars taxes due and unpaid, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas by such default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of such power of sale contained in and recorded with said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said County, or by his deputy of the County, on Saturday the 30th day of May A. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lots, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: Lot (28) of block one (1) in McManus' subdivision of out-lots nine (9,) ten (10) and eleven (11) of Hurlbut's addition to the City of Crookston according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk County, Minnesota.

HOLSTEINS VS. JERSEYS AGAIN.

Breeders' Gazette.

We notice in your issue of April 16th the milk record reported of the two-year-old Jersey heifer Fawn of St. Lambert 27942, and the request of her owners, Messrs. Miller & Sibley: "If any Holstein breeder has a two-year-old that has beaten this record we shall be glad to hear from him."

Permit us to favor them with the records of nine two-year-old Holstein heifers of our herd which have exceeded the record of Fawn of St. Lambert (10,118 lbs. in one year):

Aggie 2d (1360), 17,746 lbs. 2 oz., in one year.

Sadie Vale (958), 14,609 lbs. 5 oz., in one year.

Superb (961), 13,373 lbs. 12 oz., in one year.

Georgie (944), 13,209 lbs. 9 oz., in one year.

Ida May (947), 10,958 lbs. 2 oz., in one year.

Aggie 3d (1076), 10,810 lbs. 2 oz., in one year.

Oatka (945), 10,661 lbs. 15 oz., in one year.

Nellie Grant (943), 10,476 lbs. 4 oz., in one year.

Lily (964), 10,217 lbs. 14 oz., in one year.

We will also give the records of a few other two-year-old Holsteins which we have in mind.

Netherland Queen (414), 13,574 lbs. 8 oz., in one year.

Netherland Baroness (2635), 10,625 lbs. 9 oz., in one year.

Netherland Consort (2639), 10,238 lbs. 7 oz., in one year.

Aggie Constance (2629), 13,724 lbs. 13 oz., in nine months and nineteen days, to March 1, 1885.

Trijn (8025), 10,334 lbs. 8 oz., "in less than nine months, to March 1, 1885."

Nundine (2845), 14,953 lbs. 11 oz., in one year.

Rosa Bonheur (890), 13,411 lbs. 4 oz., in one year.

We could extend this list had we the time, but trust the above will be a satisfactory compliance with the request.

Now the question naturally arises in the minds of those not conversant with the wonderful butter records made by choice-bred Holsteins during the past two or three years: "What is the quality of this milk and what amount of butter will these cows make which give such enormous quantities of milk?" Only six of the nine heifers named of our herd have ever been tested for butter; of the six tested, five have made records, at five years of age, of 21 lbs. 4½ oz. up to 26 lbs. 7 oz. in a week. Aggie 2d (1360), with the largest milk record ever reported of a two-year-old (17,746 lbs. 2 oz. in one year), has now, at five years nine and a half months, made, we believe, the largest butter record of any cow, of any breed, for sixty days, viz: 207 lbs. 8¼ oz. The record of the remarkable Mary Anne of St. Lambert is 209 lbs. 2¼ oz. of salted butter, or 199 lbs. 1¼ oz. of unsalted butter, for sixty-two days.

In all our tests the butter is thoroughly washed with water in the churn, then taken out in granular form and worked into a solid mass, and weighed before salting. We have trespassed thus upon your space because we notice a disposition on the part of some to assume that Holsteins are not good butter makers. The careful reader will perceive that our large milkers are large butter producers, and the largest milker (Aggie 2d) is a most remarkable butter cow. Our records are all made with the ut[illegible] to insure accuracy [redacted] clover, and may be considered as a large variety of that class. Its advantages are its perennial or permanent character, its hardiness, as no winter seems to kill it, its capability of resisting extremes of drouth and wet, its greater weight or herbage during an entire season with a certainty, when some other kinds fail. Its power of production is great, and it is adapted to some soils that are not fitted to other clovers at all. It should be sown in the spring like other clover, at the rate of four pounds of seed per acre, when sown with wheat or barley. It is not as coarse for hay as red clover, yields well, and seems to give satisfaction to those who have grown it. As a honey plant it is unrivaled.

HOW A PASTURE IS MADE.

In Great Britain, Holland, and in some of the best dairy districts of this country, land is selected for a pasture as it is for any particular crop. Regard is paid to its adaptation to produce a large amount of fine rich grasses. The soil or sod is prepared to receive the seed, which is selected with special reference to the production of grass to be eaten while it is in its green state. Great pains are taken to render the soil as productive as possible. Water is supplied or drained. Weeds and bushes are exterminated or kept in subjection. Most farmers, in this country, however, neglect all these things. Land is not selected for a pasture. If it is too rocky, broken, or difficult to cultivate; if it is too wet or too dry to produce good crops of corn, grain, potatoes or roots, it is devoted to pasturage. Land is selected for other purposes, but the land pasturage is what was rejected as unsuited for any other use.

The above from the Canada Journal of Agriculture is equally true of the West, and when we do have a pasture, we graze it to death. We want more good grass pasture as we get more good stock. Good grass, good water and good stock will bring the greatest wealth without impoverishing the soil.

THE BENEFITS OF BLOOD.

Life is too short to waste years of valuable time in the attempt to get the best stock by selection and seeding. Let us profit by the life work of others and the skill of nations in developing superior breeds. Let us procure the best breeding animals of these established types and come at once into the benefits of the improved blood. If the full blood animal does cost a few hundred dollars outlay at first, it is cheaper and more profitable in this short life to thus bound into the benefits of blood, and we will soon sell young stock at advanced prices to repay the first outlay and a handsome profit. A man can't afford to walk to Chicago or New York nowadays when he can go by railroad so much quicker. So it is in breeding improved stock. All enterprising farmers who think at all about making money, want some good stock. How best to get it is the problem. Their prejudices formerly arrayed them against the fine stock breeders, but the breeders of improved stock have won a universal victory over this prejudice. Improved stock is now finding every Western farm and the advocates of scrub stock is an exception.

THE FARMER'S HOG.

The Breeder's Journal says the different breeds of hogs have their fast friends, and no doubt they each have what their friends admire in them, but the average feeder who does not care to raise pigs to sell for breeding purposes, should strive to get a hog that will make him the most money for the feed put into it. In the first place a hog should have a good coat of hair; not bristles, but hair. A black hog will not get scurvy on his back; the sun will not blister him. A hog should have a good constitution, with round sprung rib and good girth around the heart, short neck and head well put on, short face and nose, tail put on not way up his back nor yet too low down, hams round and well filled, not too sluggish disposition nor yet too wild. By the purchase of a right kind of a male pig, the feeder can raise just such pigs as he wants to feed, and have much more profitable and healthy animals than he can buy. The brood sows can be run on clover pasture in summer at very little expense, and if provided with some good clover hay in winter, it will reduce their feed bills. Not enough attention is paid to providing good pasture for the pigs; they are generally kept in a barren lot with a [illegible] mud hole in it, in which [illegible] so foul that just the smell [illegible] sickening, let alone having to [illegible] for a change of pasture, it [illegible] thought of on account of the [illegible]. The sensible way [illegible] provide for them, is to have enough [illegible] to their use so that the [illegible] a good and [illegible] pasture of [illegible] time. Do not keep them [illegible] old poisoned ground for [illegible] when the grass gets run [illegible] plow it and take off a couple of [illegible] then reseed to clover, and then let their hogships take fresh comfort, health and fat, from the new, fresh ground and grass. This ground will then supply the living for the pigs, while in the other way of doing, the pig lot is full of weeds, bare of grass, and the bare ground covered with mud and hog wallows.

ARTICHOKES.

Analysis of artichokes show them to contain more fattening power than potatoes. They cannot be kept out of the ground over winter, but should be left undisturbed until the ground thaws in spring. Hogs, after living all winter on dry feed, can be turned on them to dig for themselves until after corn planting. Then turn the hogs off; harrow down smooth and mellow, and the plants will come up thick. Cultivate in rows as before, and the same ground can be kept on artichokes for years with no replanting. Cultivate the same as potatoes. A common yield is 500 to 1,000 bushels per acre. One writer claims to have had 2,000 bushels. They are excellent for brood sows in spring, as also for poor run-down shoats, to give them a start in growing.

CATTLE RAISING.

An average profit of about thirty-four per cent. is figured for cattle raising in a recent and carefully written article of Harper's Monthly. The Chicago Tribune in commenting upon the article says: "This is doubtless not far from the average results of cattle raising on the plains. It is quite possible, of course, that some have realized greater profits from growing and grazing cattle on the plains. But even at thirty-four per cent. per annum upon an investment in a business so safe and permanent as cattle raising on the plains has been, a man of contented disposition might be quite well satisfied."

THE DAIRY COW.

The dairy cow must be good for milk, butter, cheese and beef. To get her, we need a grade Holstein heifer—the higher the grade the better. She must be so fed and cared for as to produce a good growth of frame without excess of fat, and bred so as to drop her first calf at about two years old, the calf to be soon taken from her, and she milked by hand, and kept in milk as long as possible. Her pasture should be well drained and supplied with an abundance of good grass and pure water. Her stable should be warm and clean, and her feed liberal, corn meal, bran, oil meal and early cut hay are excellent for this purpose. I am not certain but that feeding grain lightly the entire year would be profitable. A better quality of her product may be made on the farm than in the miscellaneous creamery. Increased fertility to the soil is an incentive for keeping her on the farm, and, finally, keeping such a cow is continually a source of pleasure and profit to the owner.

PURE BRED ANIMALS.

Every dairyman who desires to make his business as profitable as possible, should turn his attention to securing pure bred animals of what he considers the best dairy breed, at the earliest possible moment. It is an exploded idea that a half scrub is better than a pure bred animal. In breeding your cow select the very best pure bred male to be found, no matter if you have to pay a good price for his service when you could get that of a scrub for nothing. Follow this plan each year, taking care that the male possesses merit and blood calculated to produce progeny fitted for the dairy, until you are ashamed to remember that you were ever satisfied with your old mongrel herd.

MAKE GOOD BUTTER.

An exchange truly asserts that the gap between the prices of fine butter and low grades has been gradually widening for several years until it has now become apparent to the most casual observer that poor butter must go. Dairymen and farmers who wish to be on the winning side should put their best foot forward now, and determine to produce gilt edge articles and no other.

The whole operation of butter making, from the taking of the milk to the delivery of the butter to the consumer, is entirely mechanical; but it is a branch of mechanics that tolerates no mistakes; for the least failure to perform the operations at the proper time results in an inferior article; and perfect butter only commands the highest price.

Tom Bjoin is building a large machine shed.

Stone & Pinkerton have received several carloads of goods.

Mr. Linblad is building a residence on Sampson's Addition.

The Germania House sports a pioneer bar since the fire.

Mr. I. Tharaldson is up from Chippewa Falls for a short visit.

The new bridge will soon be ready for the building of the approaches.

Conductor J. B. Copeland went to Barnesville on Monday night to take his train.

Fine growing weather this week and wheat and grass is starting upwards right smart.

Judge Reynolds has moved into Jim Brower's residence, on the hill, opposite the court house.

New house in Sampson's Addition with 4 rooms to rent for $6.00, apply to Fontaine & Anglim. [2-3]

W. L. Sargeant went north to see about some cases of glanders that had been reported. Found it a false alarm.

The Crookston Improvement Co. have given ten acres in South Crookston to a party who intends to build a large saw mill.

The fire-bell called out the department last Friday night, all owing to a chimney at Ben Clements' that was trying to burn out.

The Crookston Improvement Co. have decided to grade Minnesota street through South Crookston, and also Castle avenue to Polk street.

W. W. Mitchell walks about like he was walking on eggs, all on account of twelve pounds of little girl who came to live at his house on Friday last.

Fred Puhler, of the Journal, Ada, was in the city last week. This is Fred's first visit in over three years and he notes many improvements in our city.

Dupuis & Laframboise have obtained a 500 barrel well at the N. W. elevator at Edna in a few days work. They are now at work on another on D. T. Herriot's farm.

W. W. Campbell was up from Ada last Saturday. He reports another fire in Ada of an incendiary origin. An attempt was made to burn a billiard hall, but it was nipped in the bud.

Ada Index: The Polk County Journal entered upon its ninth year last week. It is one of the oldest and best newspers published in this section and is always on the people's side. We wish the Journal a long and prosperous career.

Gus Aubol has changed his bar to the south side of the room, washed and painted up the wood-work and added a number of fine pictures, which makes his billiard hall look neat and inviting.

Many farmers have improved the opportunity to get seed wheat from the P. & H. elevator. There was about 33,000 bushels, much of which was not injured, for seed. What they do not take is being shipped to Milwaukee.

Bear tracks were discovered on the farm of M. E. Bartlett one day last week, but Mart says he don't care, if the land the bear walked over will bear 20 bushels per acre No. 1 Hard, and the Bear and the Lion cause it to go to $1.25 and upwards! In that case he thinks he can grin and bear it.

The Katie Putnam troupe played the "Mad Cap" to a poor house on Saturday evening last, but gave perfect satisfaction. The action of the Claxton crowd of the week before injured the business of the Putnam troupe very materially. This troupe may appear again on its return from Winnipeg.

Middleton has had another fight with Riel's forces and it seems to be a stand off which licked. If those fellows keep on fooling down there it will create the boss oat market for us next fall. If Russia and England should—well, we don't like war, anyhow, but we can't help looking on the bright side of all disagreeable things.

Grand Forks Herald: "Mine host" Topping, of the Richardson House with pride exhibits a collection of mineral specimens sent him by his brother-in-law, D. J. Roop, treasurer of the Ballard mines, located in San Miguel county, Colorado. The specimens are gold quartz in which the precious metal is quite prominent. They are said to assay from $60 to $20,000 per ton. They are but the ordinary run of the rock and indicate great wealth.

Lawyer Havrevold, formerly of Ada, but now a leading citizen of Grafton, D. T., was in the city on Saturday to see a man who is detained here by the county for a few days until he can explain how he came to whittle up a man in Fisher last winter. Mr. H. had business relations with this man last fall of a very comical nature. He went to the man's house to serve some kind of legal papers and after having served said papers laid down on a bed to rest and refresh himself in sleep. While sleeping, the party of the second part, with dire intent (and a sharp razor), did proceed to cut from the aforesaid Havrevold all of his wearing apparel, leaving him destitute, and then vamoosed the ranch. August Wentzel has rented the old Dew Drop saloon.

Splendid growing weather. Grass and wheat are on the jump.

Rev. C. Saugstad is building a residence on Sampson's Addition.

Gilbert Meckelson is building a residence on Sampson's Addition.

Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels have secured the opera house for June 15th.

The new water sprinkler is a dandy. It made its first appearance on Wednesday.

Charboneau & Brown are putting up an office on Main street, just south of the C. O. D. store.

Preparations are being made to celebrate St. John's Day in Crookston. A big time is expected.

Filiatrault has not heard from Katie Putnam Co., as yet but expects if they come it will be Monday or Tuesday next.

The Crookston Improvement Co. have given ground for a church and efforts are being made to secure the building.

J. K. Arnold will lecture in the opera house on the 23d. Subject "Personal recollection of the Sioux War." Capt. is a good talker.

A scissors-to-grind man was in the city last week. It is thought to be the one that belongs to Kate Claxton's two orphans; leaving in such unseemly haste she must have forgot to take it along with her.

They tell a good story on Dune Terry. It is said that he has a fine pair of Guineas and thought he had the only ones in the city. Not long since he saw them (as he supposed) in a neighbor's yard and at once laid seige to capture and take them home. After several hours hard work and failing to capture his birds he went home to learn that his own Guinea hens were safe in their own coop. Dune didn't tell the story.

Bray & O'Brien received their stock of hardware on Monday and are temporarily located on Boradway in the place recently occupied by L. Couvrette as a meat market. They have been crowded with work in the tin shop since they opened their doors but still they say bring on the work, they will try to keep up with it. The boys are both sober and industrious hard workers and will doubtless do well. Good luck attend them.

Again The Fire Bell.

At about a quarter to one on Wednesday morning the fire bell sounded its notes of warning owing to a fire breaking out in the ruins of the old P. & H. elevator. The fire department soon turned the river into the incipient blaze which discouraged the young blaze in short order.

Fertile Items.

FERTILE, May 9, 1885.

Seeding around here it nearly finished and much of the grain is up. The acreage is as much as last year and farmers are taking more pains than ever before.

Our community is as prosperous as any in the county.

Four good schools running in Garfield township. The one in Fertile is under Miss Vedla Cartright.

Messrs. Sohler & Co., have made a contract with Mr. Gunn, of Minneapolis, to put into their Sohlerville mill a 100 barrel roller mill machinery, guaranteed to make as good flour as any in the State. They will commence work at once.

The roads between here and Beltrami are well nigh impassable, and we hope the people along that route will put their road graders at work this summer.

Considerable ground is being seeded down to grass this spring and every farmer seems to be trying to get hold of stock.

We want some party with the requisite capital to start a creamery here and feel sure of 400 cows within a radius of eight miles. Roads and water are both good. No use of sending below for butter. Any party wishing to look this matter up can write to La Due & Co., of this place.

Eric Erickson's house, just about completed, was destroyed by fire last week. We are sorry for him.

Mrs. Sohler and her sister, Mrs. Barholz, who have been ailing for some time, have gone to Ada to consult Dr. T. Stewart. We hope both ladies will soon recover their usual health.

Mr. Gunn while here making plans and estimates for Sohler & Co's roller machinery said the new mill was as well put up as any mill he knew of, and everything was adapted for what he proposed to make, viz: a first-class roller mill. Mr. Sohler, or, as he is familiarly called, "the old man," may not be a Bismarck, but for good, substantial, money making mill-wright he cannot be beaten. He has built some twelve mills in this State.

Mr. A. Solene, of Lake Park, is clerking for La Due & Co.

Trade is keeping up quite well here. La Due & Co. will commence work on their Sohlerville store soon.

We are sorry to learn that uncle Damon Dodge has injured his knee quite severely.

We notice several fine looking horses on our streets, which looks as though our stock should improve.

COUNTY NEWS.

Red Lake Falls Messenger.

Surveyor Arnold arrived Monday and has since been busy surveying the approaches to the new Clearwater bridge and making profiles and estimates for the grading. Contracts will be let on Saturday.

Matters at the Roller Mill Co's. dam and race are terribly quiet. No one knows who does or will own it and consequently nothing is being done to improve or protect it.

The steam chest and some of the heavy shafting of the Detling mill which were lately sent to Morrisey Bros., Crookston, for repairs, have arrived, and only wait the completion of the bridge to be put in place in the mill.

Mr. Detling will at once put a bridge across the sluice way of the Kretzschmar dam to replace the one carried out by the runaway ice breakers. This with the remainder of the movable spans will complete the bridge over the Red River.

T. B. Walker's first drive of about 2,000,000 feet, mostly scattered lots, will reach Terrebonne about the last of this week, and Red Lake Falls about ten days later. The main drive, about 8,000,000 feet will follow in about two weeks.

Parties wishing white Brahma eggs for setting will call at the Journal office for particulars. [2-3]

The Polk County Journal has just entered its ninth year, with continued financial success, and improving appearance. We congratulate friend Cooke, for while he does slop over sometimes, he has done good service for Crookston and deserves success.

F. J. Detling is making all possible preparations for early resumption of work at his saw mill. He now has men at work overhauling the machinery and regulating things in the mill and yard. The carrying away of the centre span of the bridge over the Kretzschmar dam may delay work some but the mill will probably start up soon.

Grand Forks Herald: In view of the lack of water supply, the JOURNAL wonders that there is anything of the city left after the recent fires.

We cannot imagine what authority the Herald has for making the above remark, for the JOURNAL never said any such thing, even by inference, but did distinctly say that again the city owed its existence to the water-works. The exact words we used were: "Again the salvation of the city may be credited up to the 'inefficient' water-works." If the Herald or any other man is blessed with good common-sense, they should be able to understand that, but as the Herald does not seem to, and there may be a few more feeble-minded idiots who do not, we will explain what we meant. The Herald is doubtless well aware that there exists in every enterprising community a few tender-foot croakers who never can see any good in any public works until it is pounded into them with the hard club of experience, and hence it is that in Crookston a few antiquated frogs have always croaked against the "inefficient" (the Herald will please notice that "inefficient" is QUOTED, and is what the FROGS say and NOT what THE JOURNAL says. Is that plain enough for your understanding?) water-works and at every little break the aforesaid frogs swarm every mud-puddle and in chorus croak, "I told you so! The water-works are inefficient!" The fact is that this entire city has been saved several times from total destruction by fire by these same water-works, and there is not a tax-payer in Crookston who would consent to have what taxes he pays to support them refunded and be without the protection afforded by them. Does it look like "a lack of water supply" when for nearly one hour our fire department were able to save a livery stable filled with hay, straw and other combustible material from total destruction in all the fierce heat caused by the burning of a large elevator not over away, with fire brands just raining upon the roof of the barn and the wind blowing square from the fire to the barn? So fierce was the heat that it was impossible for any man or any animal to live a moment between the barn and the burning elevator! So fierce was the heat that the roof of the barn smoked like a tar kiln, and the water poured upon it in floods, dried up in a second, and clouds of steam arose constantly. It was a fierce fight and even the aforesaid croakers were forced to admit that only for the water-works the city must have gone for it under that terrible heat and clouds of floating fire-brands. If this had been the first fling indulged in by Grand Forks papers we might, perhaps, conclude that it was a misapprehension, but as it is, it looks like petty jealousy. We don't know what kind of water-works Grand Forks has; We don't care a continental, but we have this much to say, that if they have one-half as good a system as Crookston has they have a most admirable defense in case of fire. Since we have had them Crookston has not had one as disastrous fire as was the Plaindealer fire in Grand Forks last winter, neither one as expensive, but she has several times PREVENTED worse ones. In the burning of the Wilson building, on Robert street, when the fire was not discovered until the building was nearly destroyed, we have an illustration. That building was a regular tinder-box, was surrounded on all sides with pine buildings, dry and eager to burn, but that fire was extinguished with but the loss of the one building with hardly a feather scorched upon the surrounding buildings! The Herald need give itself no uneasiness as to the condition of our water-works. If the Herald is as well protected it is in luck and is as safe as it is possible to be under the circumstances.

Small Pox at Crookston.

Grand Forks Herald, Saturday, May 9th.

A report was brought over to-day of [illegible] cases of small pox in Crookston. Any of our people who have business over there will do well to be vaccinated before going there.

That Grand Forks Herald does seem to love to say "nice, pretty things" about Crookston, and judging by the eager manner in which it picks up every floating rumor it would like to see the city wiped out by small pox. This is not the first silly rumor it has helped to spread. A few days ago it had "six cases at one hotel in Crookston!" As there has been much said about this matter THE JOURNAL deems a short history of the whole business not inappropriate. A few weeks ago a man came from one of Walker's camps and put up at the Merchants hotel and complained of not feeling very well. A doctor was called when it was discovered that he was broken out with a rash of some kind or another. It was pronounced by several doctors to be a mild case of small pox, while a few doubted it. In order to be perfectly sure a pest house was provided the man moved into it and the hotel thoroughly disinfected. In due time another case occurred that of a man [illegible] business as usual. The second case was removed to the pest house as before and the house again thoroughly disinfected and closed up [illegible] single case in the city and no danger whatever from the cases that have been. The State Board of health sent a doctor up to the camp where the disease first appeared and he has quarantined the camp so that there is but little danger from that quarter. Grand Forks is in as much danger from that source as we are as the men are just as liable to go there as to come here. There has been rumors on our streets that Grand Forks has had several cases but we have not, like the Herald, caught on eagerly and did our little best to spread the rumors. The Bulletin man did repeat the rumor in our case but had the manliness to say that such rumors were always unreliable. We can interpret the Herald's action in this case only to the wish that the rumor was true and that the half had not been told, for these vicious attacks can come from no other source, and the Herald is well aware how true such rumors are apt to be. It certainly has not shown good judgment in the matter nor has it shown much charity had there been any truth in the reports. The Herald has ever belittled the Plaindealer but we must say we have never caught the Plaindealer indulging in such weak little attempts to injure Crookston as the two which the Herald has been guilty of within the past week.

Red Lake Falls Times: THE JOURNAL starts out on its eighth year and goes along the even tenor of its way, as good as the best.

The Times is in error slightly as to our age. THE JOURNAL has completed its eighth year and entered upon its ninth. We trust that our friends and the Times will never have occasion to change their good opinion of us.

Duluth News: Both Judge Stearns and Judge Reynolds have been busy trying cases this week and rushing the business on the docket. Court will probably adjourn next week. Judge Reynold's has won the esteem of the members of the Duluth bar during his stay here.

WARLIKE RUSSIA!

A Strong Party Organized for Trouble Crowding England to the Wall!

Lumsden Accused of Writing the Natives and Causing the Penjdeh Affair.

The Vote of Credit—Gladstone's Enemies Russia Continues to Arm Herself.

Evening Journal.

LONDON, May 11.—The conservative papers generally do not wish to vote adversely to the government on the war credit, but consider that the government ought to give the opposition more information as to the present state of affairs. All the telegrams from India deny the reported resignation of Lord Dufferin. The military party in Russia continues to spread reports to the discredit of England. The latest is that the Russians captured at Penjdeh some of Sir Peter Lumsden's dispatches proving that he encouraged the Afghans to invite a collision with the Russians; that copies of these documents were sent to the English cabinet and that therefore Lumsden was recalled. St. Petersburg advices report that quantities of gunpowder and dynamite have been stored at the several coaling stations. Work continues at Cronstadt. Odessa telegrams state that the troops which passed there just mobilized from the reserves were a horde of unkempt peasant youths, ignorant of the use of rifles, which some of them were hardly able to carry. Hungarian papers report that Peter, son of the Prince Karageorgewitz, has gone to St. Petersburg to endeavor to obtain Russian support should he issue a manifesto asserting his right to the throne of Servia. He also hopes that his father-in-law, the prince of Montenegro will support his claim by force of arms. The Vienna newspapers are agreed that the prince is a possible tool of Russia, and must be closely watched. A Belgrade official paper denies his hereditary right to the title of prince.

Brainerd Dispatch: The surveying party of the Brainerd & Northwestern road has by this time reached Leech Lake. The route has been comparatively easy thus far, though it is expected that the route between Leech Lake and Red Lake Falls is a little more rugged and possibly some difficulties may be met with. It is expected that at least fifty miles of grading will be done this summer and quite probable that the iron will be laid for some miles out of Brainerd. The country that the road goes through is almost entirely destitute of railroad facilities. About sixty miles north of the N. P. road there are a good many wheat growers and 200,000 bushels of wheat annually has to be hauled to the railroad, a two days trip for transportation. The great pineries are north of that still, and with the fine water power at Red Lake Falls, which when developed will take all saw mill and lumber interests from Crookston. We shall derive a large amount of business in this line. That is why the Crookston people are so opposed to the Brainerd & Northwestern. Will the Dispatch kindly inform us how the B. & N. W. road will manage to get control of Mr. Walker's mills and lumber. It generally takes two to make a bargain [illegible]

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

[This column is placed at the disposal of the Crookston W. C. T. U., who are cordially invited to fill it each week. ED. JOURNAL.]

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

Is it possible that there are any WOMEN in Crookston that have not signed the pledge? Are you so indifferent to a possible influencing of your brother, your father, your friend? Do not, I beseech you, let neglect fix your position in the matter. Do not let the hesitation of another, a foolish speech, a joke, the criticism of anybody, stop your action. It might as well be a cannon that deters you, as far as the result is concerned. What shall we call her who has not the courage to do a right action for the sake of her friend.

In our better moments, when our higher nature has been stirred, and we long to be a power for good to others, we think, "O, if I could only do some great and noble action, if by self-sacrifice I could save hundreds of lives, or influence hundreds of lives to turn from seeking the wrong to seeking the right!" But such an opportunity never comes to us, we think. Is not this somesuch opportunity as you have been wishing for, dear friend? and such as does not very often come to us? By this simple action to publicly enroll yourself on the side of the right? Suppose your decision were to influence ONE to the same step. Suppose that one were to influence one or more to the same choice. Suppose the circle to go on extending. Is the supposition without a basis of probability? Ask the blessing of the Lord who giveth the increase, upon your deed, and He may multiply it to the thirty, the sixty, or hundred fold.

An Old Temperance Pledge.

The following is a pledge taken from an old almanac of the year 1837:

"Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirits, as a drink, is not only needless, but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction, that should the people of the United States, and especially all the young men, discontinue entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of our country and the world.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

The Slaughter of the Innocents.

BY GEORGE H. SCOTT.

A few years ago the king of a heathen government caused the slaughter of two hundred maidens, that he might mix their blood with the mortar that was being used in the erection of an idol's temple. When this fact became known, the civilized world stood aghast contemplating the horrible deed with commingled disgust and indignation.

The above paragraph has been sent me by a friend living in New Jersey, and is an extract from the Christian Standard.

Mark the expression, "the civilized world stood aghast." Mixing up mortar with the blood of young maidens is enough to make, not only the Christian portion of society, but also what is known as the moral part of the community, fairly shudder. The terrible deed was committed for the purpose of building a temple for an idol, and by the order of one who represented governmental authority. For the lack of proper education, I suppose the people of the country where it took place gave assent to the crime. In this country, not many years ago, husbands and wives were separated on the auction block for the purpose of gratifying the avarice of King Cotton. "Awful!" you say; but too true. In the effort to do away with that crime churches were rent assunder;; brother fought against brother; the air was filled with smoke, and the soil drenched in blood.

Another tyrant, called King Alcohol, yet remains in the land. Ask him if the blood of two hundred maidens will satiate his appetite? "Too small a meal," will be the answer. Look at the temples erected for the purpose of congregating together the regiments that help to make up the army of King Alcohol in New York city, for there are at least eight thousand of them. Every brick in their walls represents part of human bodies; and the mortar that holds them together would be red with blood if the crimson life fluid, that has been poisoned, as the result of "drink's doings," could be gathered together and applied to the mortar. The slaughter of two hundred maidens by a heathen ruler, is insignificant compared to the yearly slaughter going on in this great metropolis to build up the temples of the drink curse, and the gambling houses and brothels connected therewith. Ask yourselves the question, How many victims do eight thousand saloons require in a year to make good their financial wants? The "dead-heap" is not composed exclusively of males, but bodies with long streaming hair make up a part of the pile. They were once called women [illegible] ful death the death-record calls them "unfortunates."

I once saw a young woman take a glass of liquor, with the remark, "ANOTHER NAIL IN MY COFFIN;" and to her sentence a half intoxicated bystander added; "You have not many more nails to drive in."

The slaughter of the innocents is awful; that is, among those who have to suffer for the wrong-doings of others.

I was asked not long since if correct statistics of the evils of intemperance could be had if a commission was appointed by Congress to see to the matter. My reply was, "If the residents of a single city cannot collect evidence enough within its borders to forever after brand the liquor traffic as the crime of crimes, it is because the people of that city are blind to all that is bad, and won't see."

Two hundred maidens slaughtered, and "civilization shocked!" Go count the liquor-killed victims that inhabit Potter's Field, and what will be the result of your investigation? You will find them by thousands. And all sent there by a legalized system that the average voter says by his ballot is RIGHT; or at least that he will not vote against.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

By the Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior, prepared and reported semi-monthly for the Polk County Journal by Archibald Young, Attorney at Law and late Examiner of Mining, Railroad, Homestead, Pre-emption and other contest cases in General Land Office. Office 637 F St., Washington, D. C.

PUBLICATION OF NOTICES.

Registers must designate paper nearest land having general circulation; but where two or more are published in same town, may elect the one which will best subserve the purpose of the law. (Sec'y, April 21st, 1885.)

PRACTICE.

Upon presentation of relinquishment of entry after withdrawal of contest against same, such entry shall be canceled by Register and Receiver and land held subject to settlement. (As't Com'r April 14th, 1885.)

2d. It is not competent for Commissioner to rescind an order allowing an appeal to Secretary. (As't Com'r, April 14th, 1885.)

3d. Notice of review dismissed for the reason the applicant was a stranger, to the record, contestee, but not a stranger, may set up an equitable defense recognized by practice in force when contest was initiated. (Exparte. Holating-Review. Acting Sec'y, Jan. 5th, 1885.)

SWAMP LANDS.

Commissioner's duty to review testimony taken at hearing regardless of appeals, and field notes of survey may be consulted to ascertain facts as to the character of the land, (Oregon vs. Seiger, et. al. Sec'y, April 9th, 1885.)

2d. Lands returned as subject "to periodical overflow" not swamp and overflow lands. (California vs. Hemington. Sec'y, May 1st, 1885.)

CITIZENSHIP.

Applicants for homestead and timber culture entries, should state in their affidavits that they are native born or naturalized citizens, or have filed their declarations, and if naturalized record evidence required. (As't Com'r, April 17th, 1885.)

TIMBER CULTURE.

Contest against timber-culture entertained where application to enter was filed subsequent to contest affidavit, but prior to notice of hearing and before intervention of rights of third parties. Only in extreme and extraordinary cases should special agents reports or other exparte testimony be substituted for evidence taken at hearing. (Drake vs. Schupp. Sec'y, April 15th, 1885.)

RAILROADS.

A homestead entry made by an agent segregated the land embraced therein and excepted it from railroad withdrawal, although homestead affidavit was made before claimants commanding officer and set forth that he was a single man in the naval service of the United States. (St. P. M. & M. R. R. Co. vs. Forseth. Sec. March 12th, '85, and same Co. vs. Hoef. Sec. April 30, '85.)

2d. Homestead entry having been allowed, it was prima facie valid, and being of record at date of railroad grant, it excepted the land from the grant. (Hastings & Dakota R. R. Co. vs. Holden et. al. Sec. April 27th, 1885.)

3d. Withdrawal does not operate upon land embraced in a pre-emption claim of record at date of such withdrawal. No claim to land as indemnity can be asserted prior to selection. (St. P. M. & M. R. R. Co. vs. Blad. April 14th, 1885.

Peterson's Magazine for June comes to us, a paragon of beauty, ahead of all others. The principal steel-engraving alone is almost worth the subscription price. "No other magazine," as we often hear said, "has such steel-engravings." A charming story, by Frank Lee Benedict, illustrates this pretty picture. The colored steel fashion-plate is also unusually brilliant, even for "Peterson." Most of the other illustrations—some fifty in number—are devoted to the fashions, to patterns in embroidery, etc. The "Story of Louisiana Pine Lands"—one of rare merit—is finished in this number. But all the stories and novelets in "Peterson," as is well known, are exceptionally good. Considering the low price of this magazine, and its very great merit, we wonder it has not [illegible] ought to take it. The terms are but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs, and costly premiums to those getting up clubs. Now is an especially good time to subscribe: for a new volume begins with the July number, when those who do not wish back numbers can commence. Specimens are sent gratis, if written for, to persons wishing to get up clubs. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Stock Improvement.

Detroit Record.

The farmers of this section realize the advantages of an improved grade of cattle, and the action of Messrs. J. W. Dunn, M. S. Converse, Ove Voight, Jas. Hickey, J. O. French, Geo. W. Taylor and John Alair is deserving of the highest commendation. They have organized under the name of the Becker County Holstein Association, and have purchased one of the best thoroughbred Holstein bulls in the country, which reached Detroit last Sunday in charge of Mr. Dunn, who brought him up from St. Paul. This bull which is only two years old weighs 1500 pounds and was imported from Holland in May, one year ago. He is pronounced by all who have seen him, a perfect beauty. He was bought of Geo. E. Brown & Co., importers of Holstein stock, of Aurora, Ill., for $400, and is now on the farm of Mr. Dunn in this village. The association has named this fine animal Becker County Prince, and it is the intention to use him in raising the grade of their own herds, and also to place his services at the disposal of a limited number of outside parties at a reasonable price. These gentlemen are certainly deserving of success for their enterprise in this matter.

THE STATE DAIRYMEN.

The Summer Meeting of the Association to be Held on the Largest Scale.

St. Paul Dispatch.

Preparations are in a forward state for the forthcoming meeting of the Minnesota State Dairyman's Association, which takes place at Moorhead in June, presumably the third week. It is anticipated that not less than one thousand persons interested in dairy matters will be in attendance. About thirty leading dairymen and agriculturists of this and other States have been invited to present papers on important topics, among them Prof. Knapp, of Clinton, Iowa, professor of agriculture at the Iowa State university; Col. Coffin, of Fort Dodge, Ia., Orange Judd, late of the American Agriculturist, and other men of like prominence in the agricultural world. One object in fixing so late a date for the summer meeting is that many who have never yet visited the Red River Valley may do so when it is in the bud and blossom of its natural beauty, and therefore get a correct impression as to the wealth and fertility of that entire region. At the Faribault meeting in the winter there was an attendance of eight hundred or over, and the summer meeting is expected to attract a much larger number.

Why Some Farmers Do Not Succeed.

They are not active and industrious.

They are slothful in everything.

They do not keep up with improvements.

They are wedded to old methods.

They give no attention to details.

They think small things not important.

They take no pleasure in their work.

They regard labor as a misfortune.

They weigh and measure stingily.

They are wasteful and improvident.

They let their gates sag and fall down.

They will not make compost,

They sell hay, grain and straw off the farm instead of turning them into meat, cheese and butter, and increasing their supply of manure.

They let their fowls roost in trees.

They have no shelter for stock.

They do not curry their horses.

They leave their plows in the field.

They hang the harness in the dust.

They put off greasing the wagon.

They starve the calf and milk the cow.

They don't know that the best is the cheapest.

They breed to and from scrubs.

They have no method or system.

They have no ears for home enterprise.

They see no good in a new thing.

They never use paint on the farm.

They prop the barn door with a rail.

They milk the cows late in the day.

They have no time to do things well.

They do not read the best books and newspapers.

They think one dollar is better invested in whisky and tobacco than in a subscription for a good weekly, home and agricultural paper.

They think the buyer of a successful neighbor's stock at good prices is a "fool," and the seller very "lucky."

A story is told of an old fashioned farmer who had an old axe and saw stolen from his shed. At first he was disconsolate, as he had the tools in use nearly fifteen years, but necessity compelled him to purchase new ones in their place. He was so much surprised at the ease with which the new tools worked that, of his own accord, with no agent urging, he went to the hardware store and purchased a new kit of all tools that he wanted and threw the others away. He had lost more value in time working with poor tools than would buy new ones twice over.

There are not so many good plowmen now as formerly, in part, doubtless, a result of using the sulky plow, with which extra skill in plowing does not count. Another reason, probably, is that few hired men now understand the art of setting a plow so that it will run easily for both team and holder. The plow should run level, the point neither digging downwards nor turning up. It is but the work of a minute to set the plow right for one who understands the business. Good plowing is an art; bad luck to the country should it become one of the lost arts.

Says the Western Agriculturist: "Our leading breeders and importers have drawn from all European countries whatever promised to improve what we had. Francis Galton says nature is more potent than nurture. The successful dairyman or stockman means the same thing when he says that breed is better than feed. The best management is largely wasted unless you have well bred stock to care for. This acknowledging the merits of blood has placed our Western country in the lead of every civilized country for the best of all breeds.

The following are the points desirable in a practical farmer's hogs: Fine short nose, dished face, fine ears, good width between eyes, eyes not too prominent, a straight, broad back of uniform width from shoulders to ham, short legs and fine bone. He should stand well up on his pins, fat at any age, and if well reared, make a weight of 250 to 325 pounds at 11 months. Now, does the foregoing description of a model farm hog fully describe the well bred Berkshire? I think all will agree that it does, and I am satisfied that if the reader will notice the character of all the various breeds of swine he will find that the most popular ones are those which come nearest to the model farmer's hog presented above.—[Cor. Farmer's Review.

We have just received another bill of Wall Paper, new and very pretty patterns. Our spring stock is now complete in every department. We buy direct from manufacturers and importers at the lowest possible prices for spot cash, and will give our customers the benefit.

CROP PROSPECTS.

St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Enough is already known concerning crop prospects for the season to justify the advice of the Pioneer Press that the Northwestern farmer should not decrease his wheat acreage, and to make glad the hearts of such as have followed it. Of course, if there should be a foreign war the enhancement of prices would ensure a liberal profit to the farmer, no matter what the general condition of the country's wheat crop [illegible]. But, entirely aside from considerations of war or peace, the indications are that this will be a comfortable year for the man who harvests a liberal wheat crop of good quality. Advices at this season are little better than guesses, and even these are so frequently manipulated for speculative purposes before they reach the public as to make them notably untrustworthy. But a few things are certain. One of these is that there has been vast and now irredeemable injury done to the winter wheat crop. Reports from one winter wheat-producing State after another repeat the same story of wheat winter-killed, of large areas turned under this spring, and of a certain falling off, even at this early date, of from 25 to 75 per cent. in the yield. All the other dangers of the crop, drought, rust, storm, bad growing weather and bad harvest weather, are still before the wheat plant. But without counting at all, terrible injury has been done by the changeable severity of this stern winter, and the source from which the bulk of our wheat yield is derived is sensibly diminished. There is no telling as yet whether the cold snap of the past week has or has not done much injury to spring wheat. The latter is the more probable, since the greater portion of the crop in the Northwest was hardly far enough advanced to suffer, and since the few days of rain and frost were immediately succeeded by pleasant weather. But taking the most favorable view of this, and supposing that the season from this time on should present none but favorable conditions, there would still be probable a very considerable shortage in the aggregate wheat crop. This is what was to be expected with certainty enough to justify prediction. Years of extremely bountiful yield do not succeed each other directly many times in a century, and it would be strange did we not soon strike the shortage that is due. It is safe to hazard an opinion that wheat will not sell again for many a day at the price paid a few weeks a[illegible] The advantage of the enhanced price which seems now reasonably well assured will remain with those farmers who have kept up their acreage and upon whom the season smiles. The Northwest has the best of it in both respects. The advice of the Pioneer Press has been generally followed, and there will be little if any decrease in the acreage of Minnesota and Dakota combined. And the Northwest is the only section of the country where a great diminution of the yield per acre is not already assured. Our farmers are on the brink of better times.

GRAIN AND MEAT.

The following very just remarks are from the National Live Stock Journal:

The production of grain and live stock is, with us, really one industry, for the two products are so mutually dependent that one could hardly exist without the other. I[illegible] then a question as to whe[illegible] cease raising grain and [illegible]ead; this would be [illegible]nes because [illegible] The farmer [illegible] get his grain [illegible]ef, pork or m[illegible]e, what [illegible]

[illegible]tion, until the general farmer came to regard his wheat as the staple crop.

The result has been to denude many farms of their original fertility, and, in spite of the vast extension of wheat growing in the new northwest, to leave the average yield just about where it was ten years ago. In the meantime a vast increase of competition has taken place in the wheat market of the world. India has appeared as a competitor, and all England's power has been directed to enlarging that score of supply. South America and the Antipodes are in the field, and our farmers have at last unmistakable evidence that their staple is a treacherous venture after all, affording no certainty save as to the exhaustion of the soil. In spite of low prices of wheat, however, a comparison of prices for the last thirty years will show that, in spite of occasional fluctuations, there has been a steady rise in the price of wheat.

Grain fed to the right kind of animals results in better land and conversion into more valuable form, and one for which there is a growing and permanent demand. Neither in Europe nor America, as we have shown in former issues of The Journal, has the increase in live stock kept pace with the increase in population, and this too, with a growing taste and demand on the part of the middle and laboring classes for meat viands, which steadily increasing wages enable them to supply. By putting the grain into the meat, the farmer is multiplying his profits. He makes a saving in transportation, and concentrates his time and energies. He goes to market, not with one grain or a sack at a time, but with live carloads which are sure of ready purchasers.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

SOME AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS.

Ben Perley Poor, in a series of admirable articles in the American Cultivator, has done good service to the cause of agriculture. In his last paper he says: The summing up of American agriculture is gratifying. We have 4,008,907 farms, comprising 536,081,735 cultivated acres, valued at $10,197,096,776. The annual value of our corn crop is estimated at $694,818,304; of wheat, $186,968,463; of hay $109,505,788; of dairy products, $352,500,500, and of cotton, $271,636,121. The value of the entire agricultural production of the United States for this year is estimated at $4,000,000,000. This unequalled production food shows the real value of agriculture to the public. No other country can show such broad wheat and corn fields, the surplus products of which are sent far and wide to feed those for whom sufficient food cannot be raised at their homes. Our agricultural implements and machinery are the wonder of the world, and they are being adopted by every civilized nation. We have created a breed of fast trotting horses, and our fast runners have taken many racing premiums abroad. In no other land can such herds of cattle be found as those which range on the feeding grounds of our far west, while our breeders send to England, shorthorns and devons for the improvement of the original stock. Our wool has becom noted for weight of fleece and fineness of fiber. And, above all, better than all the rest, the condition of our farmers' wives and daughters has been so ameliorated by factories, sewing machines, washing machines, cooking stoves and kerosene, that their whole time is not occupied in spinning, weaving, knitting, washing, candle making and cooking, and they have opportunities for mental improvement.

THE WEIGHT OF MILK.

The Chicago Breeders' Gazette says that for years there have been numerous discussions about the quantity and quality of milk, some claiming one thing as the standard, others insisting that their standard is correct. The Illinois dairymen's association wrestled with the questian for some time, and finally decided that they would adopt the standard of Mr. Borden, of condensed milk fame, which for quantity is: Eight and five-eights pounds per gallon. This in now quite generally accepted, not only in this country, but in Europe as well. The quality of milk has also been determined upon by the Illinois State dairymen's association, after a number of [illegible], as follows: Water, 87.5, [illegible] in a scale of 100 par[illegible] [illegible]t a few dairy- [illegible] large yield [illegible] of milk, in [illegible] pounds, which [illegible] that they either talk [illegible] or have a breed of cows [illegible]e butter instead of milk. The trouble with such people is that they do not know what they are talking about. The above standards are so generally used that we suppose all are familiar with them.

[illegible] ONLY ONE CANE. [illegible] Samuel Miller in Colman's Rural World, says: Many years ago I saw a White Cap raspberry plant, in a garden of a lawyer who made no pretensions to horticulture, but who took the notion that one cane was enough. In all my observations I never saw more fruit on one plant, yet once saw its equal, in the garden of Major P. R. Feeas, the editor of the Germantown Telegraph. In walking along with him through his garden, we came across a large plant of a most splendid Black Cap raspberry loaded with superb fruit; and when I asked him what new thing it was, he laughed at me heartily, and answered, "That is the Suprise, and the plant was sent to me by my old friend, Samuel Miller, of Calmdale."

So it was, and could be then easily recognized; but was so far ahead of anything that was over seen on my place that at first it was not recognized by me. This, too, had been trained to but one cane pinched at the proper time. Am satisfied that either of the above plants had one-half gallon of fruit on them, which would be 5,000 quarts to the acre.

WATERED BEFORE FED.

Bearing in mind that the stomach of a horse is small in proportion to the size of his frame, he requires feeding often, and, though three times a day is sufficient, four times is better. Unlike human beings, horses should drink before they eat, because, owing to the conformation of the horse water does not remain in the stomach, but passes through it into a large intestine called the cæcum. If a horse be fed first, the water passing through the stomach will be likely to carry with it particles of food, and thus bring about colic. Whatever a groom may say, let a horse drink just as much as he likes. If he be waterd four times a day he will never take very much, or too much to be good for him. A horse, it must be remembered, is fed on dry food, and this, with the strong work done by a hunter, always produces a feverishness, which a sufficiency of water tends to allay.

PARSNIPS FOR FEED.

An intelligent farmer of much experience tells the Indiana Farmer that he has lost faith in both turnips and beets as food for stock, in comparison with parsnips. They are exhaustive to the land far beyond their value to the stock, or for milk production. Parsnips he finds are excellent feed for most purposes, and especially for milk, and they are remarkably productive when properly cultivated. He has taken as many as 800 bushels from an acre.

DAKOTA CATTLE.

The cattle business is rapidly developing in Dakota, the present value being estimated at $8,000,000. The cost of beef production is from $1.25 to $3.50 per hundred pounds, the latter covering corn-fed cattle. Range cattle are figured at from $1.50 to $2.00 a hundred. From information recently gathered it appears that losses in winter vary greatly, according to shelter and care. For instance, in Grant and Pembina Counties, with good stables, there was not 1 per cent. while in Sanborn, with poor shelter, the loss was 10 per cent. It evidently pays to house stock, even in Dakota, in the winter.

Crookston, May 21, 1885.

Try mead, at Herb's Branch.

If you want a nice summer drink ask Herb for mead.

The W. C. T. U. will meet on Friday afternoon with Mrs. Marshall, Cor. 5th and Main St.

Call at Herb's Branch and sample the new-fangled drink called mead. It is said to be boss.

A large bear that had been killed northwest of the city was brought in on Wednesday last.

Go and hear Cap. Arnold tell what he knows about the Sioux massacre next Saturday evening.

It is not General Meade but it is Herb's mead that is in general demand these hot days. Go to Herb's Branch for it.

Markham has a limited quantity of the Rhea Indian corn, which ripens in 70 days from planting. Leave orders early. [4-6]

Everybody drinks mead at Herb's Branch.

M. E. Bartlett went out to his government farm this week. He intends to crop it heavily this spring. He says he has the best farm in that country.

The council have passed an ordinance raising the license for selling liquor from $200 to $500. This, of course, does not apply to licenses granted on May 1st.

Mr. E. R. Blanchard has made arrangments to deliver artesian water at your door at the same price as charged for river water. This is an improvement that people will appreciate.

Herb Masen has moved the P. O. News Stand to Second St.

Bro. Rothpletz, of the Red Lake Falls Messenger was doing the city on Wednesday. Rothpletz is not half a bad fellow if he would keep off of stilts and was sound politically. He has got some mitey good ideas on some topics.

The Norwegian celebration on Saturday last, owing to the rain, was not as grand a success as it would otherwise have been. However they had a big turnout and report having had a good time.

Fine refreshing showers last week.

Brother Brown, of the Marshall County Banner and his excellent wife have been called upon to mourn the loss of their only child—a baby boy. They have our heart felt sympathy in their sad bereavment.

Mead at Herb's.

N. B. Harwood, who is so well known as the Minneapolis dry goods merchant who in 1880 failed and skipped, died suddenly in Jacksonville, Fla., on Sunday. He had been thrown from his horse [illegible] seriously injured the day before.

Numerous sales of lots are reported on Sampson's Addition to Crookston and nearly every one to be built upon at an early date. The Crookston Improvement Co. have expended a great deal of money in building up their property.

The St. Vincent New Era man suggests an editorial association for the upper counties to meet in Crookston sometime at an early day. The idea is an excellent one and has the hearty approval of THE JOURNAL. What say you, brethren of the press?

J. O. Milne reports one more fine Holstein heifer calf weight 100 lbs. Its dam is a grade short-horn cow purchased from the March—Spulding farm last summer, an excellent milker. He will, ere many years be able to show as fine a herd of milkers as can be found in Polk County.

Fisher Bulletin: The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has entered its ninth year. The wide influence this journal possesses should lead its gifted editor to take a more prominent stand in regard to abuses than he often does and then we have no doubt there would be fewer of them. We wish our confrere all success.

The Manitoba company are doing a good thing for this country by offering to carry free all members of the Dairymen's Association to the June meeting in Moorhead. All farmers who are interested in the prosperity of this country should join the Association and go down. The membership fee is one dollar.

On Friday last farmer Milne, on Sec. 8, Crookston found a bouncing grade Holstein heifer calf weighing 83½ pounds. Its dam is a light native heifer, three years old, its sire, Everett, a thoroughbred Holstein. The little fellow, looks like a thoroughbred Holstein being a beautiful black and white. J. O. is convinced that "blood will tell.'

Fergus Falls Journal: It's enough to make a glandered horse laugh to see Gen. Jim Baker register at the hotels as from "Oakwood Farm, Blue Earth County, Minn.," and Commissioner Murdock as from "Murdock, Swift County." These horny-handed farmers having planted their dried-apple seed and set out their water melon trees, are now ready to about the State on a grand junket from now till harvest, at State and railroad expense, and listen to "popular" grievances. Their experience in Ottertail County on their present trip will probably teach them that the people are happy and have no complaint to make.

The grass is growing rapidly and stock now find pretty fair feed upon the prairie.

Preparations for sawing at Walker's mill are active. The mill will soon be cutting the lumber at a rapid rate.

Crawford & Son will open their ice cream parlors for the season on Saturday. For a nice dish of cream go to the Second street bakery and interview them.

Fred Reynolds is up from Duluth on a short visit with friends in the city. We learn that he has taken a partner (don't get scared, girls,) in the law business at Duluth.

The city council have given strict orders for cleaning up yards and for keeping them so, but we would like to know how this is to be accomplished when men are allowed to feed hay to their teams in every lane and on the rear lots anywhere in the city they are a mind to. The council should instruct the police force to look into this matter if they expect our citizens to obey the mandate.

The latest from the seat of war in the Northwest is to the effect that Col. Otter tackled Poundmaker, the restless Indian Chief, and after a severe fight captured Poundmaker and a lot of braves. Dumont is still at large but most of Riel's council have surrendered. It is evident that the rebellion is practically at an end as the capture of Poundmaker removes the last force of any importance and will doubtless discourage the Indians.

The firm of Averill Russell & Carpenter, of St. Paul, has been dissolved and re-organized as Averill, Carpenter & Co. The new members of the firm are Frederick P. Wright and Eugene J. Stilwell, two young men who have been with the house for years and who are well and favorably known in the Northwest. Mr. Wright has been in the house and Mr. Stilwell on the road for a long period. Both are hard-workers and excellent young business men and we take pleasure in noting their just promotion. Success.

Fisher Bulletin: After some years knowledge of the gentleman, we have never known Mr. Hugh Thompson to go back on his word, excepting so far as he generally does twice as much as he promises. He promised that if the people would subscribe $2,500, of which the townsite proprietors would give half, he would put up a 75 barrel mill, to be in running order by December 1st. As will be seen in our telegram, arrangements have been made for a hundred and fifty barrel mill and to be in running order by October 1st. The land has been purchased and work will commence at once. How about the stupid rumor spread about by our few misanthropes that the mill proposed was a "license dodge." For all they would ever do for the good of the town it would indeed be only a dodge.

Mr. Joseph Rondeau died at his residence in this city on Monday morning at the advanced age of 88 years. He was born in Lanorais, Canada, on Aug. 31st 1797 and at the age of 16 he entered the service of the Hudson's Bay Company for a term of years. While he was in the employ of this company he married, coming soon after to Fort Garry. From there he went to St. Paul taking a claim in what is now the heart of that city. He also had another claim then, now Erwin's addition. He came to Crookston in 1876 where he has lived ever since. He was the father of nine children five boys and four girls; eight children and his wife survive him. None of his sons reside in this city; his daughters, Mrs. L. A. Michaud, Mrs. Joseph Barrette, and Mrs. N. C. Barrette are residents of this city and Mrs. J. D. Beaudro, of Black River, this county. Mr. Rondeau was always a hard-working man, was highly respected by all who knew him and even during his later years his life long habits of industry kept him always busy. Full of years and usefulness he calmly sleeps the sleep that knows no waking. Peace to his ashes.

Capt. Arnold's Lecture.

It is needless for THE JOURNAL to introduce the Capt. to a Crookston audience, as he is well known and has many warm-hearted friends, but when we say that we have it upon good authority that he has broken the chains that enslaved him and is now more like himself when in his sober senses, we say something that will carry joy to the hearts of his friends, and even his enemies cannot forbear to say "amen!" As to his lecture it is highly spoken of by all who have heard it, and we feel sure that the Capt. will be greeted in Crookston by a full house. Everybody should turn out to greet him and lend a helping hand of encouragement. That this may be so is the heart-felt wish of THE JOURNAL.

Elected Again by a Small Majority.

J. W. Lilly, Esq., returned from his visit to his old southern home bringing with him a life partner. The lady in question was a resident of Louisville. THE JOURNAL bids the bride a hearty welcome to our Northland and wishes the couple a long and happy life.

Patents Accumulating.

All those who have patents at the U. S. Land Office in Crookston are hereby requested to bring along their receipts and get their patents. There are many patents awaiting claimants who seem to be somewhat slow in claiming them.

A Very Proper Thing to Do!

The necessity for a larger and more commodius hotel in this city is a fact and has been well understood by our people, and the traveling public generally, for a long time past, and while we have witnessed the erection of first-class hotels in nearly every city of importance throughout the Northwest, and our own city actually fifty per cent. short of the requirements in the matter of hotel accommodations, it would seem a very proper thing to do for our citizens to break ground and cause to be erected a commodious hotel without further delay. That this can be accomplished is a matter of whether we will or not. If we all have a particular locality where such a building must be located, and no other will do, then our efforts will fail as it has in times past, but if we are willing to allow other buildings to be placed anywhere within the city limits where a sane man would be likely to place such a building, I can see no obstacle in the way of getting a first-class hotel this season—and now the reader may ask how this is to be done? I will answer, upon strictly business principles, viz: "for value received I am willing to pay." This principle established and carried out will also build Crookston to a great and important city, but waiting for something to turn up, or for somebody to turn something up, or, for somebody to do what we would not be willing to do, or for an opportunity to get something for nothing, would be simply playing "a game for the scratches" there are in it, and if we are waiting for any chance arrangement like this we are only waiting for disappointment. On the other hand if we encourage and aid the building and establishing of improvements among us we may hope to get them, but if we remain indifferent and unconcerned, we may expect them to give us the go-by.

But to return to the subject I had in my mind when I commenced this article, and that was the building of a hotel, I will say: 1st, let the real estate and town-site owners get together WITHOUT DELAY and make up a block of property from the various subdivisions and additions within the city, and tender it to the party or parties who will supply this necessity for a hotel. This method appears to me to be within our reach, practicable, and a very proper thing to do.

Battoche Fallen.

RIEL CAPTURED.

Such in brief is the reports received from the seat of war in the Northwest during the past week. Battoche was captured after a brief fight by a bayonet charge and the half-breeds driven out and in a few days the report of the capture of Riel followed. Riel will be tried in the country in which his supposed insurrection occured and a conviction is doubtful. The insurgents are said to be coming in to Middleton's quarters in squads and surrendering and the only signs of rebellion yet existing is in Poundmaker's band of Indians who are on the war path, "big as a wolf." The old man gobbled up a supply train last week and is now raging 'round in those parts like a thoroughbred Jersey. It is thought that the old fellow will be corralled at an early day and the insurrection squelched.

England and Russia.

The skies are not so clear in this quarter. The Russians don't seem to be ready to accept the overtures of England and there is more than a possibility of a big war yet. While we depreciate war we shall try and put up with it if it must come.

Plaindealer: When the grass begins to grow and the trees leave, the Richardson House is the most pleasant place in the city and in this beautiful month of May it has assumed its usual delightful appearance. Mr. Topping as landlord of the Richardson House has made a host of friends.

Minnesota State Dairymen's Association.

Moorhead News:

It has been decided by the Minnesota State Dairymen's Association, as heretofore stated in the News, to hold its summer meeting in Moorhead, and the date has now been fixed, to begin on Wednesday, June 24th and continue three days. Great efforts will be put forth to make this meeting the largest and most interesting one ever held in the State.

Mr. Schreiber, who has just returned from St. Paul, where the executive committee of the association held a meeting and decided upon the date and programme of the summer meeting, informs the News that the following distinguished gentlemen will be present and make addresses.

President Gurgh, of the Illinois State Dairymen's association; E. Ostman, of Dundee, Ill., the great silo lecturer; Orange Judd, formerly editor of the American Agriculturist; Col. Milton George, of Chicago, editor and proprietor of the Western Rural and American Stockman; Col. J. H. Saunders, of the Breeders' Gazette; Prof. Knapp, of the Iowa State Agricultural College; Hon. L. S. Coffin, of Fort Dodge, Iowa; Prof. Henry, of the Wisconsin State Agricultural college; Ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour, of New York; Hon. Norman Coleman, commissioner of the department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Hon. DeWitt Smith, breeder of blooded stock, of Bates, Sangamon county, Ill.; Prof. Lombard, of Chicago, vocalist.

At the meeting held in St. Paul, it was decided to offer $140 in premiums. It is expected 400 or 500 persons will attend from Southern Minnesota alone, and the railroads have agreed to give free transportation to all members of the Association, and as any respectable person can become a member by paying a membership fee of $1, it is probable a large number will avail themselves of the opportunity of a visit to the Red River Valley, as it will be an occasion of extraordinary interest, besides furnishing an unprecedented chance of traveling practically free of cost.

The following programme of exercises executed at the March meeting held at Faribault, will give a good idea of the features of the meeting to be held here, which will be similar.

First day. Meeting called to order by president; prayer, address of welwelcome, by mayor; response, music by the glee club, address, more addresses; "The Cow," by a distinguished lecturer; discussion of the same, more music by the glee club; "Minnesota as a Dairy State;" lecture on "Improved cattle for dairy purposes," and discussion.

Second day. Lecture on "Jersey cow on her native heath," on "Minnesota and its dairies," discussion of the same, address, music by glee club, more addresses, lecture on "Natural adaptability of Minnesota for grasses," discussion of same; "care of milk, cream and dairy stock," "Handling butter and cheese in market," "Making and curing hay," general discussion of above topics and music.

Third day. Report of committee on premiums. The remainder of this day the association were the guests of the city and visited different objects and poi

We're kind o'got you in our power—
Yer daren't be too rash.
Yer listen to them wimmen folks
An' meet 'em with a smile,
But the've no votes for you to gain—
Yer know it all the while.

At times yer pass some pesky law,
But soon 'tis done away,
For sich as bear too hard on us
We allus disobey,
'Twould save a heap o'trouble
If our advice were asked,
An' whether we'd obey sich laws,
Before you had 'em passed.

We've only jest two things ter do,
Then rest our happy souls.
The first ter keep the wimmen folks
From votin' at the polls;
We'll let 'em talk just as they please
On every public walk—
In politics the humblest vote
Outweighs the biggest talk.

The other thing we've got ter do
Now, jest 'twixt you an' I,
Is ter keep the two old parties up,
Nor let old issues die.
An' thus divide the temp'rance vote
An' make 'em work agin
Each other, while we hold the power
An' make our own men win.

An Economic View of the Drinking Habit.

Amid the crumbling wall of a ruined palace a wonderful contest was held. The ground was scattered with fragments of monuments and faded laurel wreaths. Broken and decaying trees threw down their withered leaves with a mournful sigh. Moth-eaten parchments rustled in the wind. A ruined temple, dark with the gloom of departed magnificence, enveloped the place in sombre shade, and its tottering walls deepened the effect of desolation, ruin and decay. This was the domain of Waste, and hither he had summoned all his servants, and bidden each give an account of his deeds; and to that one who had served him most effectively a great reward was promised.

First, War advanced, and boasted of the destruction he had wrought. He told of armies put to flight, of conquerors who had fallen by the sword, of many nameless graves where heroes sleep. He showed his bloody hands stained with the blood of innocent victims.

Then Fire came forward, in her hands she bore two flaming torches that lighted up her panic-stricken face with a wild and lurid glare. Waving them high above her head she told of the beautiful palaces she had kindled, of the busy manufactories she had burned, of the accumulated wealth of many years changed to ashes in a day.

Then the Powers of the Air spoke. They boasted that they had destroyed whole villages in a single hour, no workmanship of man could withstand them, without warning and without resistance they ground his hopes and labors to the dust.

Next, hollow-cheeked Famine and wild-eyed Pestilence told of the strength, the money and the lives they had collected for the great King Waste.

Then, with the slow and stealthy step that long custom had made habitual to him, the giant Intemperance advanced, and thus he spoke:

"The work of all your other servants, Oh, great King Waste, is not to be compared with mine. I have gone to every civilized land on the earth, I have entered the palace and the cottage, I have claimed the ignorant and the learned, the debased and the pure, I have strengthened and aided every vice, I have opposed and thwarted every virtue, I go to the reeking haunts of evil, and mingle with the vicious and depraved; and I go into the holy church and from beside the very altar I steal many a victim. Listen a moment to what I am doing. I ruin the individual physically, mentally and morally. I destroy the home. I undermine educational and religious institutions, and finally, if my power is not checked, I will overthrow the State. Each year in America I take the lives of sixty thousand men. Thousands of others die from thirty-five different diseases that I either cause or intensify. But more than this. It is not only the disgusting sot with filthy clothes, palsied limbs and feverish eye, whose strength is wasted. Every drop of liquor taken by the respected and self-confident man diminishes to some extent his vital force. As his love of rum increases, his will-power weakens, his pride changes to self-contempt, his manhood is wasted. His soul, which once was pure and earnest, grows weak and vile. His strength and happiness, his influence and life are sacrificed to [illegible] King Waste. And more than this, for well I know that your sway extends beyond the grave, and reaches even into the pearly gates of the Eternal City and no drunkard shall enter therein. With this [illegible] comes suffering. First, those at home to whom he owes the tenderest care, suffer from his indifference disgrace and abuse. Then the community suffers from his influence and example. The educational and religious institutions which he as an enlightened and free man is bound to support, suffer from his neglect. At last his country shall veil her face and weep that her ignoble sons loved intemperance more than her glory. Is not the prosperity of a State commensurate with the purity of its homes, the truth and devotion of its defenders, the honor and patriotism of its citizens, when I am present no true home can exist. He who loves the wine cup more than his country's welfare is not patriotic. He is like a poisonous draught, that, being within the system of the nation, is more fatal than any peril from without. So as my sway extends, your kingdom shall increase, King Waste, and lands now prosperous shall become desolate like the fallen empires of the past."

For a moment the fiend was silent, while every other agent of destruction sadly sighed as he realized how much greater was the work of intemperance. In a mocking tone the giant resumed: "If the nation should look with unprejudiced eyes on the financial aspect of the Drinking Habit, my power would soon be ended. Seven hundred million dollars is yearly expended in the United States for liquor. All this money not only produces no good results, but fills the hospitals, poor houses, jails and insane asylums, and thus costs the notion millions more to take care of my victims. It is not only the ignorant and poor whom I enslave. I also claim the finest intellects, genious that the country needs to fill its council halls, to invent and guide its machinery, to compose its libraries and to occupy its pulpit, is misdirected and degraded until that which should be the mainstay of the republic becomes only an encumbrance. Which of your other servants can compare his work with mine? The whirlwind can overthrow man' dwelling place, can he also blight the love that makes a home? War causes many tears to be shed, but they are tears of pride as well as sorrow. But those that fall beside the graves I fill have only bitterness in them. Which of your other servants can make a mother steal from her child the last necessities of life to satisfy her own appetite? Which one can kill the honor, the purity and the soul as well as the body of his victim? Oh, great King Waste! you have many servants and they serve you well. But before them all I claim the prise, for in all the world there is nothing so disastrous to the economy of natures forces and to God's beneficent plans for mankind as the Drinking Habit."

The American Agriculturist for June, 1885, is another of the surpassing excellent numbers of this valuable periodical, of which each number is a delightful surprise to the reader. The illustrations are most attractive, highly artistic, and at the same time practically useful. The title page picture, by Bennett, is a striking group of cows and a watering trough. A vignetted plate entitled "June," by Folsom, is a warm and sunny grouping of rural scenes. Three prominent breeds of non-sitting fowls, Leghorns, Crevecœurs, and Houdans, are discussed and beautifully represented. The Polish Swans of the Central Park, form the subject of an instructive article, and of a picturesque engraving. An article on Carrier Pigeons is illustrated by a portrait of the Champion Homing Bird of England, a silver-dun Antwerp. Two fine horse portraits will gratify horsemen. As usual, this number is replete with handy devices for saving labor, and brief but useful hints on hundreds of topics. It contains besides, an admirable Barn Plan by D. W. King; illustrations of flowers and plants, of the highest beauty and accuracy; an article by Rev. E. P. Roe on the "Profit in Small Fruits near Large Cities;" and convenient and tasteful objects of utility or decoration in the household; while for the boys and girls there is a rare treat in a story by R. M. Stewart about water and its Ways. "The Doctor" talks about Indian Corn, and there is a clever conceit in the personification of "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Yearly subscription, $1.50; single numbers 15 cents. 751 Broadway, New York.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

ANOTHER GREAT BUTTER YIELD.

The American Farmer gives the details of a test of another of the wonderful butter-producing cows of Mrs. Shoemaker, of Maryland. The trial was officially conducted by Andrew Banks, for the American Jersey cattle club. The cow is Oxford Kate, 13,046, and her milk yield, in seven days, ending April 8, at 4 p. m., was 248½ pounds, which produced 38 pounds and 2 ounces of unsalted butter, which, when salted at the rate of one ounce to the pound, weighed 39 pounds and 12 ounces ready for the market. She was milked regularly at 4 o'clock twice a day, and averaged 35½ pounds per day. But her milk and butter yield was scarcely less astonishing than her appetite, for she required, in addition to a plentiful supply of good clover hay, beets and carrots, a daily ration of over a bushel of rich grain, viz: Four quarts wheat bran, three quarts linseed-oil cake meal, sixteen quarts ground oats, and twelve quarts pea meal, one of the richest cow foods, and largely used by dairymen who desire to get a big record for their cows. Oxford Kate is a little past six years old. How many tests of this kind she can bear without breaking down or losing her life is, of course, a problem.

GROWING MILLET.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer writes as follows concerning the growing of millet: "I see some inquiries about millet—the manner of growing and feeding it. As I have been growing it for three years I will give you my method. My experience differs somewhat from that of some writers on this subject as to the time of sowing. I find that as soon as the ground is warm it is time to sow millet, that is mostly about the middle of May, but if the ground is good it will produce a good crop if sowed in the middle of June. The first thing to have is good soil, the next, good seed, if you expect to have a good crop. The amount to sow to the acre I find to be one bushel, as a rule, and I find the German millet to produce the most feed per acre. In harvesting millet, the manner that has proved most satisfactory to me is to cut with a mowing machine and let it lie in the swath about one day or until it is wilted on the top, then rake into winrows and shock, and you need not be in a hurry to haul in, as it will stand two weeks in shock without any damage to it. Then you can either stack or draw to the barn, but there is no grain or hay that is as well adapted to stock as millet. As feed for horses or sows, or even calves, it has no superior, if an equal. For horses, I find it sufficient feed when not at work. As for feeding sheep I have never used it in that way, but think it would be very good. As to harvesting it with a reaper and tying in sheaves, I find that it is not a success with me. I have cut it both ways and in the future I shall cut it with my mowing machine. I have had the best success by letting it get about ripe at least the seed should be well formed and begin to color before cutting, and it is more easily cured and I think makes better feed.

THE BEST DAIRY COW.

Says an exchange: "An intelligent correspondent writes for information as to the best 'dairy cattle' to be found. Suppose we possessed the information necessary to furnish convincing proof as to which was the best breed of cattle for the dairy, it would be worth many a fortune to Canada and the United States. The truth of the matter is that farmers, breeders and dairymen all over this continent are trying to solve this very problem, and to-day there is no very well defined consensus of opinion on the subject. It might, perhaps, meet the views of a majority of the dairymen, and cattlemen generally, to say that for butter the Jerseys and the Guernseys are considered to hold the lead, while in the matter of cheese and milk, the Ayrshires and Holsteins are the favorites. And even this disinterested statement as to the respective qualities of our leading dairy breeds will doubtless meet with dissenting protests from individual breeders. If it does, so much the better, for, if a general discussion on the subject of dairy cattle be stirred up, our inquiring correspondent will be able to collect a great deal of valuable data, and possibly be able to answer the question he has propounded, to his own satisfaction, at least.

TREE GROWING IN DAKOTA.

The Bismarck Journal says this of the experience of Colonel William Thompson, the veteran soldier and pioneer, in raising trees on the Missouri slope: "He took up the first tree claim in Burleigh county and that land district, located a mile or so north of the capitol. He filed on it eight years ago and has fourteen acres of trees, mostly box-elder and ash, raising from the seed. On his homestead adjoining he has also cottonwoods, willows, maples and catalpas. He has succeeded in growing evergreen to some extent. The chief obstacle he had to contend with were animals of various sorts. He has in all perhaps a half million trees, some of them a foot in diameter, and has done a good service to that section in showing that compliance with the tree claim law will secure forest trees."

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of seven hundred and seventy-two and 80-100 dollars, ($772.80-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Louis A. Genereux, unmarried to Lauretta M. Boies, bearing date the 11th day of March A. D. 1884; and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1884, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 44 and 47, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $700 bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 11th day of March 1889, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that past due interest thereon should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date said interest became due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1885, and the interest now due on said interest the mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-nine (29,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 6th day of July A. State Dairyman's Association.

MOORHEAD, MINN., May 11, 1885.

EDITOR POLK COUNTY JOURNAL: At a meeting of the board of managers of the Minnesota State Dairyman's Association, held at the Merchants' Hotel, in St. Paul, it was decided to hold the coming June meeting at Moorhead, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of June.

Between two hundred and five hundred of leading dairy and creamery men from the southern part of the State will be here with exhibits. The St. P. M. & M. R. R. will carry members of the association to and from Moorhead free of charge, and will run a special train from St. Paul and Minneapolis on the 23d for the benefit of lecturers and members attending the convention. We have favorable replies from some of the best dairy lecturers in the country, with many others yet to hear from. Among the most prominent are Hon. Horatio Seymour, of New York, Willard, of Chicago, Hoard, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., Orange Judd, the veteran agriculturist, etc.

Membership certificates will be forthcoming in due time, and offered for sale at prominent places. Present indications show that beyond a doubt this will be the most complete and successful dairy convention ever held in this country. I trust the people of the Red River Valley will avail themselves of the benefits to be derived. The Moorhead News will publish a list of the names of lecturers so far as heard from.

Yours, respectfully,
F. J. SCHREIBER,
Vice President Minnesota Dairyman's Association.

DON'T CROAK.

American Rural Home.

The backward spring, low prices of farm produce, combined with other causes, have recently produced an astonishing large crop of croakers. The blue and bilious bipeds are always "around," especially in spring, but this year they are more numerous than ever, for hardly a rural neighborhood has escaped their dolorous and depressing influence. They are worse than the seven-year eczema, for their lugubrious prophecies and "can't-grow-anything-anyhow-this-year" facile expression and action tend to greatly discourage those who would otherwise be hopeful and industrious, and hence more or less successful even under favroable circumstances. Indeed, as we have said aforetime, whatever may be his calling, the chronic croaker is a stupendous nuisance. But the farmer who is forever grumbling and repining, either because the weather is too hot, the season late, wet or dry, or on account of low prices, the failure of a crop, or the loss of an animal which might have been saved but for his own negligence, is the worst croaker in the category. These long-faced gentry are pretty thick about these days and not confined to any section of the country, though it's a great pity they couldn't be colonized in some locality—a sort of Botany Bay or Salt River region, where the congenial souls might enjoy each other's despondency. Even some well-to-do farmers go about their work most lugubriously, as though attending a funeral was the mournful duty of the day,—whereas they ought to go forth cheerfully, to plow, plant and cultivate, with full faith in the promised seedtime and harvest. The husbandman who does his duty promptly and properly, wisely adapting himself to seasons and circumstances, will usually have very little occasion for fault-finding, when his crops are matured and garnered. Therefore go afield hopefully and manfully, leading and directing in person, and thus prove yourself worthy of that success which is usually secured by well-directed skill and industry. In short, whatever you do, leave lamentations to the lugubrious, lazy and lagging legion, and—DON'T CROAK.

INVEST ON THE HOME FARM.

American Rural Home.

Many a ruralist would greatly augment his prosperity by devoting more means to permanent and other improvements upon his farmstead. Somebody has said, and we think sensibly, that one of the greatest leaks on a farm is the practice of robbing it to get money to put into a savings bank. In such a bank of deposit four or five per cent. interest may be secured—if the cashier don't happen to be operating in Wall Street or speculating elsewhere—while the same money put back on the farm in the way of improved stock, machinery, better buildings, underdraining, fences, orchards etc., would, after a very few years, return dividends of fifty per cent. Money in the bank don't usually show until it comes up in the administrator's hands, but in good stock and well cultivated farms it will give returns speedily and with certainty.

There is another way in which some, if not many, farmers "miss it" by investing in the wrong place. For example, many a grasping and ambitious farmer lives penuriously, depriving his family of a decent home and various comforts, in order to purchase more acres. Possessed with the insane idea that he must own all the land that joins him, or as much thereof as possible, he governs himself accordingly. To accomplish this selfish purpose he lives in the old house long after it is unfit for occupancy, makes slaves of himself and family, and neglects the proper education of his children. Were he to invest the money thus hoarded to buy more land (which he does not need) upon his home farm—his rural home and its occupants—himself and family would soon be the gainers in both prosperity and happiness. By expending his hard-earned and miserly-kept surplus in improving his farm, stock, etc., and making home comfortable and attractive, he would not only be quite as prosperous, but enjoy life far better, and keep his children from leaving the roof-tree, disgusted with a slavish, miserly mode of farming, to seek other and uncertain employments.

The Most Profitable Horses.

Farmers make a mistake when they slight the advantages to be derived from keeping good horses, and from breeding a pair or two of colts every year. A three-year-old colt can be reared as cheaply as a cow of the same age, but while an ordinary price for a young three-year-old cow is forty dollars, at the very least, when a year old, and one hundred and fifty dollars when three years old. If, however, a good thoroughbred sire is used, at the cost fifty dollars, the colt at three years may easily be worth three hundred dollars. Roadsters in the North, and saddle horses in the South (both are really roadsters), are the most desirable animals to rear. The thoroughbred blood is like the steel one puts into a machine; it gives strength, firmness, lightness, durability, elasticity, and vigor into the cold blood. The bone is harder, and more solid, and lighter; the sinews are stronger and more elastic; the muscles are firmer, and have greater tension; the lungs are more capacious; the weight is reduced, and with more strength and vivacity of motion, and less weight, we have swiftness and ease of movement.—[American Agriculturist for June.

What a Dairyman Should Be.

The first requisite for success in the business of dairying, is the dairyman. Not every man can succeed in this business. There are some special needed in a dairyman, just as there are in persons who engage successfully in other pursuits. Success depends very much upon the natural possession of these characteristics, or at least such a natural fund of common sense, perseverance, industry, and tact, as will enable him to train himself for his chosen business. Any man who will make a good farmer, can become a good dairyman, if he so desires, and that, without any special course of education more than he can give himself by the aid of any simple manual, which gives plain but accurate directions for the various operations to be performed. Dairying is regarded to be a science, and the production of good milk, butter or cheese depends upon a close observance of its rules, that the dairyman must train himself.—[American Agriculturist for June.

Beans as a Farm Crop.

"I should think," said the doctor, "that the farmers on the new, cheap land of the Northwest would go into the raising of beans on a large scale." "When I was in Minnesota and Dakota last fall," said I, "the same idea struck me. The soil and the climate are favorable. But possibly there would be a difficulty in procuring the necessary labor to pull the beans."—"If they should grow the crop on a large scale," said the doctor, "they would very soon have a machine to pull the beans, or, possibly, thresh them where they stand. We ought to raise beans enough to supply the world. As matters now are, beans are grown on a comparatively circumscribed area, and any trivial cause may greatly enhance prices and thus effectually stop the foreign demand. Some years, beans are down to a dollar a bushel, and then up to three dollars per bushel. Of course, such extreme fluctuations seriously interfere with foreign trade. But let the Northwest take hold of the matter, and we should have a large area to draw from, and a steadier price and a larger trade would be the result. Beans are the most nutritious of all vegetables [redacted] Agriculturist for June.

Poultry for the Farm.

The continual advocacy of fancy poultry for common farm use is an error. The poultry papers, and most agricultural papers, advise the breeding of certain pure breeds, as if they possessed merits far superior to the barn-door fowls, and common poultry. This is a mistake. No one advocates the use of thoroughbred horses, well bred trotters, pure Percherons or Clydes, pure-bred pigs, or sheep, or cattle, to the exclusion of common ones, but farmers are urged to improve their common stock by breeding-up, by gradually introducing better blood and breeding, with some definite aim. Thus our common mixed sheep, which are regular breeders, good mothers, and have plenty of milk, are crossed with pure rams of one of the established breeds. If size is wanted, with long wool, the Cotswold is perhaps employed; if the wool is to be improved in fineness without so much reference to the mutton, one of the Merino breeds will be selected, while if early lambs of fine quality are desired, one of the Down breeds is chosen by the raiser. This is precisely the course which should be followed by farmers in poultry raising. The advantage of grading up common poultry is, however, not so profitable in most cases of as cross-breeding. This is, properly, the interbreeding of two pure varieties. We have, however, usually no pure breed of fowls upon the farm, and of course wish to utilize those which we have. Therefore the first thing to do is to grade up the flock. After two or three years, when they have the looks and qualities of pure-breds, the hens may be crossed with cocks of another breed, and then most of the advantages of cross-breeding will be realized. In this use of pure-bred cocks which we recommend, no male bird should run with the same flock more than two years. If he is healthy and vigorous, and his progeny of the first year take strongly after him, in form as well as feather, he may well be kept the second year to run with pullets of his own get. After three years the blood of the original flock will be reduced to one-eighth; after four years to one-sixteenth.—[American Agriculturist for June.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

EGGS MORE PROFITABLE THAN CHICKENS.

We make no allusion to those large chicken establishments where raising chickens as chickens for a near city market is undoubtedly a paying buying business. But we address the common poultry raiser, living perhaps a considerable distance from market, who wishes to make the most and the best of his stock. And to such we say raise every pullet your premises will accommodate. Treat them in such a manner that they will make more money than you can by raising chickens to sell for broilers, unless at the fancy prices that such things bring in cities.

Most country breeders have no such market for what they chance to have to sell, and the prices they obtain at the country hotel or the house of the wealthy citizen by no means pays for the extra trouble and care that early chickens cost. Of course, if you have a large number of fowls, there would necessarily be cockerels and old hens to fatten for sale, but do not make your business to sell dead stock, instead of making live hens give you hundreds of eggs every year of their lives.

ANTIQUITY OF POLLED CATTLE.

A correspondent of the Live Stock Journal, England, who has been looking up the history of the polled breeds of cattle, finds that hornless cattle have been known for many centuries. A Greek coin of Mytilene, of the fifth century, B. C., which he has seen, has on the reverse, the heads of two hornless cattle. As far back as about 2700 B. C. the Egyptians had hornless cattle depicted on their monuments, which would give the breed a history more than 4500 years old. Twenty-three centuries ago, there were known to be polled breeds of cattle in Siberia, and it is believed now, that they were kept in that cold climate in preference to the horned breeds, because they could endure the cold far better than cattle with horns. Hippocrates makes mention of "chariots drawn by oxen which had no horns," and says that the "cold prevents them from having any." It is very evident that the polled cattle are in no sense of modern origin, but that they existed beyond the date of any written history.

FEEDING MILK TO POULTRY.

A neighbor of ours, whose hens, to our exasperation, kept laying on when eggs were forty-five cents per dozen, while ours persistently laid off during the same season, on being questioned revealed the fact that his hens had a pailful of skimmed (perhaps clabbered) milk each day, and no other drink. On comparing notes, we each found that our management of our fowls was almost exactly alike, with this single difference—a difference that had put many a dollar to the credit side of his ledger, while our own was left blank during the same period, and this thin had been going on for years, with the results always in favor of a milk diet.

Young chickens should be encouraged to grow as rapidly as possible, both for their own good and the pecuniary advantage of their owner. Sooner grown less feed is a sure rule always. To breeders located in a butter-making district there is no food more of profit for this forcing process than curd made of skimmed milk separated from the whey.

COMMISSIONER COLMAN AND THE DAIRY INTERESTS.

Commissioner Colman has just established in the agricultural department a bureau whose business it will be to investigate all questions affecting the interests of the dairy. It will give its exclusive attention to collecting the latest statistical and other information relative to the dairy industry, and will give especial attention to the matter of the manufacture, sale and consumption of oleomargarine and other spurious articles sold as butter. It is said that the commissioner will probably recommend to the next congress the passage of some restrictive measure which will better protect the farmers and the public from the sale of spurious butter. In connection with this matter, it is stated that one of the scientists of the department has already discovered a simple method of detecting oleomargarine, etc., and it is understood that the commissioner will order a rigid test of the method, and, if found worthy, will give it to the public.

A short term of court is predicted.

Moorhead has [redacted] at Stewart & Laurence.

The prospects for a big wheat crop are bright.

The P. & H. elevator at Ada will be built at once.

The body of Edward Dupuis was buried on Wednesday.

Attorney Mills, of Moorhead, Minn., was in the city on Wednesday.

Fred and Stewart Chapin received the sad news of the death of their father last week.

Everybody will attend the Dairymen's meeting at Moorhead on June 24th, 25th and 26th.

Stuart & Laurence are tinning Barber's roof. For a fine job of that kind we recommend them.

Mrs. Geo. B. Ellis, of Minneapolis, is visiting with her father and mother Judge and Mrs. Reynolds.

Gene Stilwell writes us that he will be around for the last time in a few days. The boys will all miss Gene.

We keep sash, doors, including transom sash and cellar sash, at Stewart & Laurence's general hardware store Main Street.

The contract for building the approaches to the new bridge was awarded C. Hanson. The work is to be commenced at once.

Joseph Sauve rejoices in the arrival of a fine colt that stands three feet high. Its sire is Joseph Laframboise' horse and is a good one.

Henry Lewis is filling up his dooryard and building a large addition to his dwelling. Long may he live to enjoy all of which.

The First National bank is having some difficulty with water in the cellar and is doctoring for it. Hence those big pile of dirt forninst the bank.

Dupuis & Laframboise procured a 60 barrel flowing well for Mr. D. T. Herriot, at Edna in three days time. They went from there to Ole Anderson's.

The river is on a high. The bridge to Sampson's Addition is under water. Why don't this army move and provide a high bridge to the Addition?

Mr. Joseph Laframboise performed a difficult and delicate operation in veterinary surgery last week which shows him to be a skilled veterinary physician.

W. E. McKinzie has quit the newspaper business and bought out Herb Mason's News Stand on Second Street. We trust that W. E. will coin the sheckels like the sands of the sea or thereabouts.

Tom Bjaia has just received a carload of Stoughton wagons, carriages and buggies, and the new Red White and Blue mowers, said to be the best in the market. Call and look them over when you need a good article of the sort.

Ole Bang has purchased a coal black steed. He (the horse) looks like a regular war horse with "ribs of steel" and "eyes of fire" and if he don't "fire" Ole as soon as he gets a few more quarts of oats into him (the horse) we miss our guess. 2:20 with a possible half is the supposed time.

Prof. A. A. Cameron finishes his first term in bookkeeping this week. He has had about thirty pupils and has given great satisfaction. Some have expressed a desire to have the benefit of a term and from a conversation had with the professor we are led to infer that should enough desire to take lessons to form a good class he will consent to remain for another term.

Dr. W. L. Sargeant has just returned from the Stephen farm, in Marshall Co., where he was employed professionally, and he says that it would do the farmers of Polk County good to visit that farm and inspect the fine stock there to be seen. There are thoroughbred Clydesdale horses, mares and colts and grade colts, thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle, a fine Holstein bull and grade Holstein calves, besides a host of thoroughbred hogs. Mr. Sargeant thinks a look over the Ramsey farm would convince the most skeptical of the fact that there is money in stock if properly handled.

Mr. E. H. Fuller, of Leavens & Fuller, commission merchants, Duluth, put up at the Commercial house during his brief visit to our city. Mr. Fuller swears by Duluth; but he recognizes the fact that before she can attain to the greatness to which she is entitled she must put herself in line with the advantages nature has provided for her. When she does this she will become the leading wheat mart of the continent and the greatest flouring city of the world. He did not say it (but we do), however, that Duluth depends upon this country for her greatness, and we also depend upon Duluth for much of our future prosperity. Her interests lies in fostering the interests of this great country, which in time will be the well spring of all of her great industries.

Wheat 80 cents.

The wheat is coming up splendidly.

Our legal lights all seem to be interested in Marshall County this week. Where courting is there will the lawyers be also—sooner or later.

Markham has a limited quantity of the Rhea Indian corn, which ripens in 70 days from planting. Leave orders [redacted] [4-6]

[redacted] ping. He has [redacted] fine two year [redacted] lacks a bit of [redacted] seed for his auburn locks and a pair of stogas for his 7 benigns to be a whole agricultural society. He bought the cow of Joseph Laframboise, of Gentilly which is sufficient guarantee of her value as an A No. 1 butter cow.

Capt. J. K. Arnold gave an interesting chatter on the Sioux outbreak of 1862-3, at the Opera House on Saturday evening last. It had been raining hard all day and the audience was small. The Captain, being a participant in the Sioux business, well understands his subject, and being an interesting talker he was able to make his lecture of great interest to his auditors.

The Becker County Holstein Association feel very proud of their Holstein bull and are talking of buying two or three thoroughbred Holstein cows. This association is doing a work for Becker County the good effects of which will last for all time. Too few of these noble animals are in this upper country, but we expect to see the demand increase very rapidly from this on.

We learn that Mr. D. T. Herriott got badly hurt on Wednesday last. He was holding a team while men were loading Dupuis & Laframboise' well-digging apparatus when the team made a sudden start, throwing Mr. H. to the ground, the wagon passing over him. Our informant said that while his injuries were painful it was thought that nothing serious would result.

A team, attempting to haul a load of wheat up the steep pitch from Sampson's bridge to the top of the bank, slipped and fell and came near being dragged into the river. It had been raining and the ground was so slippery as to make it almost impossible for a team to walk up, to say nothing about hauling a load. What is the matter with that bridge we have read about?

The Crookston bottling works seem full of business filling orders for pop, root beer, birch beer, champagne cider, mineral water of all kinds, which they are sending out by the carload to the thirsty dwellers of the Red River Valley. They use only the best artesian well water in the manufacture of their goods which are of superior quality. For making a fine summer drink they take the cake.

The St. Paul Globe, since it put on its new summer dress seems bound to improve in every other particular as well. In its enterprise for news gathering it is unexcelled and it makes fewer bad breaks such as some of our big brothers are frequently guilty of. If it keeps on this way the other fellows will have to look a leedle, ouid else they will be left entirely.

Somehow we don't seem to see any move made for building the new bridge to Sampson's Woodland Addition. The Crookston Improvement Co. have invested thousands of dollars in buildings in streets, and in securing valuable manufacturing interests to aid in the upbuilding of our city, but somehow when it comes to granting them a reasonable request the thing seems to move wonderfully slow. Why is this thusly?

Wm. J. Bode, who used to be bookkeeper for Hack & Gallasch, writes John Watts that he is now a b-a-a-d cowboy, with spurs on his teeth and hair on his boots, way down in the Indian Territory. He writes that he has recovered from his bad cough, is in excellent health and will soon be off on the drive for Wyoming Territory. His many friends will unite with the JOURNAL in a genuine Minnesota "Ho!"

The Pioneer Press has been listening to somebody's gentle murmer and reports "ten deaths in Crookston and vicinity!" It does seem strange that a great newspaper like our big brother could not have sense enough to know that if that report were strictly true it would have come out before, but it did not seem to. It shows how very easy it is to stuff the P. P. Its capacious maw seems to take in all kinds of stuff and call it very good!

We were permitted to examine many fine paintings, the work of Mrs. John N. Ives of this city and, were we an expert art critic our pen could do justice to her work. Among many fine gems one caught our agricultural eye, being a fine representation of a farm house with a flock of sheep quietly grazing in a pasture field, alongside a winding river, while on the banks, enjoying the cool shade was a fine picture of a noble shorthorn, about a good three-year-old and fat enough for the shambles, while quietly browsing and resting about him was a group of Leicester sheep. The falls of Minnehaha was another fine painting which some would prefer to our choice and it may be a finer one but as we always welcome the introduction of good stock into our country as one of its greatest needs, we shall stick to our lovely rural scene. Mrs. Ives has a class of bright pupils whose work, samples of which we were shown does them great credit. We must confess to a feeling of surprise as well as gratification at thus learning that we have among us so gifted an artist as her works show Mrs. Ives to be.

The saw-mill started up on Monday with a full crew and now the pine logs are being made into lumber by the thousand. The price of lumber remains unchanged from last season's prices.

Detroit Record: Henry Way, of Audubon, made us a call yesterday and left us a sample branch from his apple orchard. It is but six inches long, but contains forty-nine buds, and is budding clear to the tip. Mr. Way will have over one hundred bearing apple trees in his orchard this year, including Baldwin, Duchess, harvest fruit and the various crabs, and he is convinced that, with proper care, apples can be successfully grown in Becker county. He has trees four years old which are 12 feet high, and measure three inches in diameter.

Duluth News: The News has reason to believe that the Duluth & Winnipeg road is not dead. A proposition has been prepared and will soon be submitted to the voters of St. Louis County. This propotition is about as follows: $200,000 in bonds are wanted by the company, to be given them when the road is completed and running; in consideration of these bonds the company will put up shops here costing $200,000, and will make this city the eastern terminus. Senator Jas. Hill, of Wisconsin, will be here in a short time with this proposition.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

On Saturday morning just as Mr. John Fraser and his wife had seated themselves to breakfast, a flash of lightning filled the room, completely blinding them for a few seconds and making an almost complete wreck of the contents of the kitchen. It is evident that the main force of the blow was expended outside of the house only a bolt passing down the chimney through the stove into the floor, shivering the floor into kindling wood and killing a little dog that was lying under the stove at the time. Mr. Fraser's little boy, eleven years old was seated on the floor, less than four feet from the stove but escaped uninjured. Mrs Fraser had her young babe in her arms at the time and was sitting not more than four feet from the stove and Mr. Fraser was about the same distance. Mr. John Nicholson, a neighbor, was summoned and after viewing the wreck he came down to inform THE JOURNAL. When our reporter viewed the wreck his only wonder was that a single inmate had escaped with life. The kitchen part is a lean-to on a story and a half cottage, not over 12 feet square we should judge, in which was at the time, the breakfast table, a large chest, a cupboard nailed against the wall, a parlor stove and dishes, pans and other implements of kitchen warfare. The cupboard had been torn from its fastenings and dishes pitched about promiscuously and smashed up for keeps; the chest had waltzed out about two feet and the table had followed suit while upon the table hardly one dish remained unbroken. Mrs. Fraser had set a bread pan down upon a box beside of the stove "to rise;" just before she sat down to the table. It is needless to remark that as soon as the lightning got into it it "rose." Judging by the way the ceiling overhead was plastered all over with dough we should say that it rose more suddenly than ever bread rose before. Outside of the house, and within four feet of the west end of the lean-to was a great hole gouged into the earth while from it in little rills, spreading like the branches of a tree could be traced the course of the destroyer. A similar hole was found about six feet north. It is quite evident from this that the main body of the artillery passed outside and that it was only a straggler that did the mischief inside—but it was a healthy straggler and the wonder is that no greater damage was done.

A Big Hotel.

For some time a project for building a large hotel has been on foot and parties have been earnestly pushing the enterprise. On Wednesday a committee waited upon Mr. T. B. Walker to confer with him upon the subject. Mr. Walker said that he was very anxious to see a good hotel built and said that he would build a four story, 60 room brick hotel, if the site is given him, or that he would give a bonus of $2,000 to any reliable party who would build such a hotel. We are told that a desirable site can be obtained for $5,500 and that $2,000 has been subscribed already. It does not seem possible that our citizens would let this opportunity to secure such a much needed institution to pass without a great effort to secure it. Let the good work go on.

Fatal Accident.

On Tuesday morning, about 7:30, Edward Dupuis was at work about the machinery in Walker's mill and in some way got on a two foot belt and was whirled around the pulley, crushing his life out in an instant. He was a man about 50 years old, having several small children. He had been married on Sunday last. A coroner's inquest was held and the following verdict rendered upon the evidence elicited:

STATE OF MINNESOTA, }
COUNTY OF POLK, } ss.

An inquest held in the city of Crookston, County of Polk and State of Minnesota on Tuesday, May 26th, 1885, before Henry Shepard, Coroner of said county, upon the body of Edward Dupuis, there lying dead, by the jurors whose names are hereto subscribed. The said jurors upon their oaths do say that the deceased came to his death by accidentally falling upon the drive belt, being carried around the pulley in T. B. Walker's mill, on the 26th day of May, 1885.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of six hundred fifty-nine and 80-100 dollars, ($659.80-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Narcisse Beaudin and Justin Beaudin, his wife, to the New England Mortgage Security Company, bearing date the tenth day of January A. D. 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 10th day of January A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 39, 40 and 41, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $600, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 10th day of January 1887, with interest thereon from date, until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the time said interest became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1885, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

The Riel Rebellion

Seems to be on its last legs. We were a little too previous last week in announcing the surrender of Poundmaker but not much for when the old cus—tomer heard of Riel's capture he weakened and it is now reported that he has surrendered unconditionally. Should this prove true the rebellion is on its last legs as Poundmaker was the most troublesome of the remaining insurgents. Opinions as to how Riel shall be tried differ; some claiming that he can be tried by court martial and some that he cannot. The French Canadians generally protest against his execution.

A resident of Chenango Co., N. Y., writes THE JOURNAL as to the advisability of coming to Polk County to take up a claim with about $700 above expenses of coming. The human race is so various that THE JOURNAL hesitates about advising everybody indiscriminately but we can say this much that if the person has enough of push and ambition to make a living in New York he has enough to succeed here. Our land will produce everything that can be grown in New York, the winters about as long. The thermometer goes lower but we never have the wide range experienced there and even a very slight winter thaw is of seldom occurrence. Notwithstanding the low range of the thermometer a laboring man can work out of doors as many days in the winter in Minnesota as he can in New York on an average. All kinds of small fruits that are grown in New York thrive well here, except cherries and peaches. Apples are successfully grown in Southern Minnesota and we have no doubt but that they will be here. There are but few who have tried them yet but enough have done so to demonstrate the fact that certain kinds can be grown. Our land will grow better and more wheat to the acre than any land we ever saw in New York State and can be had per acre for less than some of those York State farms rent for. Our markets, taken one season with another will average as good as in New York, and if we consider the difference in the cost of land, our markets are better. Stock will do as well here as in New York and seem to thrive and grow fat upon our rich native grasses without grain, and a man can have all the hay he is a mind to put up for the labor of cutting and securing. Yet with all of the advantages which we enjoy we sometimes meet with the ubiquitous growler who would not be satisfied in any country short of the better land, and it is even a matter of doubt if they would not find some chance to pick a flaw with that. As a rule we believe our farmers are as happy and contented as in any country and much more prosperous than farmers in some countries. Some have made the mistake of making wheat a specialty to the exclusion of everything else but the majority of these have discovered their mistake in time to prevent a total loss of everything. Our friend wishes to know if we think he can succeed on a start of $700. Well, that also depends wholly upon himself. If he wishes to do a $7,000 business on a $700 capital it is about ten times too small. If he should take a government claim and be satisfied to walk until he is able to run we should say it was sufficient provided also he has sufficient "sand" to back up his capital. The writer came to this country in '72, has summered and wintered with it ever since and sees no reason yet to change the opinion formed in his first summer's experience that it is a goodly sort of a country to be in. We have some few wrongs to right, a system or two here and there to change when it will be (in our opinion) the best place on the footstool. We would not hesitate to advise our friend to drop in and see us and see how he likes it anyhow.

OUR LATE SEASON.

From the Farm, Stock and Home.

We notice that some of our Northwestern exchanges are fearful that the recent cold snap will have an injurious effect on the growing grain. The cold, instead of being an injury to the wheat crop, will be a benefit to it. A week or so of moderately cold weather after the young crop has appeared above the surface of the ground has a tendency to a beneficial, instead of an injurious result. We do not know why this is so, but in nine years out of ten, our early sown wheat in the Northwest, that is liable to contend with cold weather after it makes its appearance, makes the best crop. We are not a prophet or the son of a prophet, but we believe that in the absence of hail storms there will be a big crop of wheat in and west of the valley of the Mississippi this fall. We believe so by the experience of other years. A cold spring has, as far as we can remember, always produced a good wheat crop the following summer.

We have in a few instances had our [redacted] by May frosts, but crops recuperated One year the was killed, root and the field up, and to rest to late oats. As far as we can judge, we do not think that the recent cold snap was severe enough to damage barley nor do we think that oats were injured to any great extent. Usually the central portions of the Northwest cannot be put down as a frosty country. The month of May is generally free from such severe visitations as the present month has experienced.

Fargo Argus: The Minnesota State Dairyman's meeting will be held at Moorhead, commencing June 24th, and lasting for three days. F. J. Schreiber, a well known farmer living east of Moorhead, called yesterday at the Argus office and announced that there would be about twenty of the most prominent lecturers of the country present, including Ex-Gov. Seymour, of New York, Colonel Curtis, the celebrated dairyman of Syracuse, and Hiram Smith, of Wisconsin. The railroad companies will carry members free to and from the association. The exhibit of butter and cheese and dairy tools and implements already promises to be very large. Among the persons proposing to display their goods is Mrs. Newell, of Farmington, Minn., whose butter took the first prize at the New Orleans exposition. The meeting will be held at the Opera House, the membership fee being one dollar each, which admits all members of the family under twenty years of age. Mr. Schreiber is one of the vice-presidents of the association. The attendance already promises to be so large that a special train has been arranged for from St. Paul to reach this city on the evening of the twenty-third. Members will be received from Dakota as well as Minnesota, and it is hoped that Fargo will assist in giving the delegates a royal reception, and with a proper effort it is probable that a meeting of the Northwestern Dairyman's Association can be secured for this city, which would be of much benefit if this result could be obtained.

The First Paper in the Country to Print the News of Riel's Capture.

Minneapolis Tribune.

We congratulate our Democratic contemporary in the State capital (the St. Paul Globe), on the lucky accident which delayed the edition so long that it was enabled to utilize a late dispatch announcing the capture of Riel, and thus publishing an account of that important occurrence before any of its contemporaries in the Northwestern field, or in the country, for that matter. The new management of this paper is as bright and enterprising as the most exacting community could desire, and when it has bull luck as a coadjutor it simply eclipses itself. When luck and enterprise are wedded in journalism they form a combination which is bound to carry success along with it, and we felicitate our Democratic contemporary on the possession of these two factors which have been so advantageously united.

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

Keep it Before the People.

Keep it before the people that the traffic in alcoholic beverage is a crime, and that God has pronounced a curse upon him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips. Keep it before the people that this crime of crimes is allowed by a law placed upon the statutes by legislators who receive their power from the people, hence the people are responsible for the law and the evils resulting from it.

Keep it before the people that the license system, enacted by the people—by their consent—through their servants, the legislators, produces nearly all the crimes (including murder, of which there are over 1,000 cases annually, committed while under the influence of intoxicating drinks, in the United States); produces nearly three-fourths of the paupers; causing the untimely death of one hundred thousand drunkards—and no drunkard can ever enter the kingdom of heaven. Keep it before the people that the 200,000 tippling shops created by the license system, our servants have made by our consent and authority; are sapping and robbing our country of its moral, religious and financial prosperity, corrupting our government, and entailing upon the taxpayer a burden far more oppressive than all other causes combined.

Keep it before the people that in some of our large cities, more money is paid for poisonous drinks than is paid for all other purposes in the way of a legitimate trade in useful articles of merchandise, and that with $2,000,000,000 of money annually paid out by the drunkard (for all are drunkards who drink for the effect of drinks) deprives all other trades, manufacturers, laborers, producers, etc., of the vast sum of money which of right belongs to the whole country, and would benefit the whole country, instead of the small portion of rum sellers and rum manufacturers.

Keep it before the people that the 300,000 slave-holders tried to rule, and then ruin the country—so the 800,000 beer and whisky manufacturers and sellers do rule and ruin the whole country, unless the people rise up, throw off all old party shackles and stop trying to regulate an evil, but to do away with the evil, elect men pledged to the enactment of laws prohibiting the manufacture importation of alcohol beverages; that under the license system the poor are becoming poorer, the wheels of trade and commerce are blocked, the whole country filled with tramps and unemployed laborers.

Keep it before the people that the old political parties propose no remedies for the present financial gloom and ruin that are like ships tossed about in mid ocean, without compass or chart; that the new prohibition reform party propose to steer for the port of temperance and sobriety, abolish the license system and prohibit the traffic in poisonous beverages, diminish three-fourths of our paupers and criminals, empty our jails and penitentiaries, etc., by closing up the doors that lead men to crime, (the 200,000 tippling shops) and turn the trade in drinks $2,000,000,000 annually—into the manufacturers and sellers of useful articles of wear, use and consumption, decreasing the demand of drinks many hundreds of millions, and increasing the demand of useful articles of trade and manufacture many hundreds of millions, which will give employment to every idle man and woman, and hasten on the millennium, which the trade and influence of 200,000 tippling shops never will.—[Bugle Call.

The daily papers of this city and of St. Paul are publishing the statement that high license has lessened the number of saloons in Minneapolis. This is not true. The saloons have been reduced as we have before stated in the [illegible] on account of the prohibitory clause in the license law, known as "the patrol line." This leaves only about one-fifth of the city open to saloons—four-fifths is under prohibition. This is a good move in the right direction, and this, and this only, has caused the reduction of saloons. We made this statement and challenge its successful contradiction.

SHOOTING AT MICHIGAN CITY.

Pillsbury & Hulburt's Night Watchman Fills a Man With Buckshot.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Sometime since Pillsbury & Hulburt sent out a circular to their agents, instructing them to employ night watchmen in consequence of so many elevators being burned down. This has been done and the result has been fatal to one man at Michigan City. It seems that a machine agent, named Abrahamsen, was out with a party a Michigan City last Saturday night. He had gone part way home with them and was returning, and passing near the elevator, the night watchman, John Wheeler asked him what he was doing. According to Wheeler's story, Abrahamsen did not reply, but made a movement towards his hip pocket. Wheeler then fired and put a number of buckshot into his left side killing him almost instantly. Abrahamsen is quite well known in this city having been employed by different firms here and by Theo Holton at Larimore. He was still with Holton running a branch house at Lakota. The feeling at Michigan City seems to be in favor of Wheeler, the people holding that he shot in self-defense. A revolver was found upon Abrahamsen.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

FOOD FOR PIGS.

The question of the relative value of buttermilk and skim-milk as diet for the pig has been for a long time mooted, but by a test recently made at the Massachusetts experiment station it was virtually settled in favor of neither. At this test the skim-milk was estimated at 20 cents per hundred pounds, and the butter-milk, which was procured at a creamery, at 13.7 cents per hundred pounds. Corn meal was bought at $28 per ton. Six Berkshire pigs, from forty to fifty pounds each, were used for the experiment. Three of them were fed together with corn meal and skim-milk, and the other three were fed with corn meal and butter-milk, all they would eat in each case. In the first lot 71¼ pounds corn meal and 982 gallons of skim-milk made 617¾ pounds gain live weight; dressed weight gained during the experiment, 510 pounds. In the second lot 717¼ pounds of corn meal and 985 gallons of butter-milk produced a gain in live weight of 619 pounds, and of dressed weight, 514.4 pounds. In the first lot the cost of feeding to produce a pound of dressed pork, 5.8 cents; in the second lot, 4.6 cents. The difference in cost is approximately equal to the cost of the butter-milk and skim-milk, thus showing them to be of about equal value as food for pigs.

THE JERSEY CATTLE BOOM.

The leading aim of the best breeders now seems to be to breed for the butter record. This is so much the case, that the great majority of Jersey cows that have a record below fourteen pounds of butter a week, are comparatively cheap, while those with a record of fourteen pounds a week, upwards to twenty-five and thirty pounds a week, are comparatively high. Those at the top of the scale are sought for and bring fabulous prices, or what would be called such a few years ago. Great emphasis is put upon their butter record, and the condition of the tests, as to rations and previous feed of cows continually grow more and satisfactory. The [redacted] of a given rations, butter, or alone in flush [illegible] made under the supervision of the American Jersey cattle club, or under the direction of such witnesses as secure impartiality and give entire confidence in their correctness. These butter records of the Jerseys are quite remarkable, compared with the average yield of common cows. They are remarkable especially as showing the prepotency of bulls.—American Agriculturist.

DAIRYING STATISTICS.

The capital invested in the dairy business of the United States is computed to be over $200,000,000; and to employ about 700,000 men and nearly 1,000,000 horses. An officer of the Erie milk producers' association says: "The average cow yields about 450 gallons of milk a year, giving a total product of 6,750,000,000 gallons. Twelve cents a gallon is a fair price to estimate the value of this milk at—a total return to the dairy farmer of $810,000,000. Fifty per cent of the milk is made into cheese and butter. It takes 27 lbs. of milk to make one pound of butter, and about 10 lbs. of milk to make one lb. of cheese. There is the same amount of nutrition in 3½ lbs. of milk that there is in 1 lb. of beef. A fat steer furnishes 50 per cent of boneless beef; but it would require about 24,000,000 steers, weighing 1,500 lbs. each, to produce the same amount of nutrition as the annual milk product does."

COW WARTS.

Warts on cows' teats are sometimes difficult of cure, but have been removed by applying once a day a liniment composed of equal parts of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine. Follow up the aplications for several weeks if necessary. Should the teats become sore have cots made for them, and let them be worn constantly except at milking time. It is said that by touching the tops of the warts with a very little muriatic acid night and morning for several days painless cure can be effected. This is dangerous to handle, however, and should be kept in a glass bottle provided with a ground-glass stopper. It can be applied with the tip of a small feather. Great care should be used not to let the acid touch any other parts than the warts, and the bottle containing it should be kept out of the reach of children. The oil and turpentine is much the safer remedy.

Foot races on the sidewalk should be strictly prohibited. Besides the danger of children and pedestrians being run over, we can't afford to build a new walk every hour or so. Distance—about five rods. Time—half an hour.

Harry Attix was in from Maple Lake on Monday, and reports a feeling of confidence among the farmers in that region. They live in hopes of a big crop and a good price. The prospects are that they will not be disappointed so far as the price is concerned.

Highest market price paid for farm produce by Hack & Gallasch.

S. A. March reports six or eight little black rascals on the March-Spaulding place at Warren. They are a combination Galloway-shorthorn from one of the celebrated Jim Hill "little black bulls," and March says they are dandies. He is very much pleased with the little doddies.

The war news for this week is slim. Riel played out and Russia and England hob-nobbing and smiling over a cup o' tea like two elderly dames, agree to patch it up for three years. Old Big Bear is on a tear in the Northwest but he will soon have the wind taken out of his sails, doubtless, and then the fun will be over. And still wheat keeps booming.

If we can do nothing more it would be a good idea to adopt the English custom of having a regular market day—or for that matter several days—some time next fall when the fine stock of the county could be gathered together, and farmers could meet and swap stories about their experience in raising stock and grain, &c. Could also buy and sell animals and transact other business of mutual benefit. That would be a good change.

Ice cold mead can be found nowhere except at Herb's. Try it and you will drink no other.

The Dairymen's meeting at Moorhead is going to be the largest meeting of the kind ever held in the State. Everybody interested in dairy matters should go.

Have you tried Herb's artesian, ice-cold lemonade? Call for it and take no other. Found only at Herb's Branch

Bray & O'Brien this week greet our readers with a broad gauge announcement to the public. It will be found in our advertising columns and makes very interesting reading.

Flour, feed and oats at Hack & Gallasch.

John McMahan knows a good horse when he sees him and he says that Terry & Collins' "Highlander" is "put up by the book." He calls him the best horse in the business.

When thirsty call at Herb's Branch for a refreshing drink of soda water or ice-cold artesian lemonade. He keeps none but the best of goods in his line.

Terry & Collins have purchased the building formerly occupied by Johnson & Stephens, moved it up alongside their stables and filled it full of machinery of all kinds. See their big ad elsewhere.

Last week we spoke of a fine colt belonging to Mr. Joseph Suave, of Gentilly. We are told that an error occurred in the item. We gave his height as 8 feet when it was 3½ feet high.

Farmers and all interested in good stock should notice J. O. Milne's announcement elsewhere in this issue and go and see his stock. He talks by the watch for he has something good and knows it.

Artesian lemonade at Herb's.

Mr. T. Lefebvre and J. B. Carle, of Red Lake Falls, gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call on Saturday. Mr. Carle intends to engage in harness making at the Falls. He is a good workman and should do well.

Ladies, please examine Hack & Gallasch's stock of goods and prices before buying.

Dave Huggard and A. E. Brush came down from Angus on Tuesday. Talking of sowing peas, Dave says it is too late—that peas sowed from now on will not fill well. He says they should be sowed as early as wheat.

Sheriff Jenks, of Grand Forks Co., has bought six three-fourths grade Norman mares and will bring them over to Terry & Collins' thoroughbred Norman Highlander. Jenks knows a good horse when he sees him.

A. L. Jackson reports seeding all done in the Sand Hill country and looking finely. Two little doddies, from the Jim Hill little blacks, on the Fisher. Says the prospects for strawberries are excellent this year. He intends to take in the big doin's at Moorhead on the 24th, 25th and 26th of June.

March & Spaulding are trying a new racket. On Tuesday they took north to their farms a carload of steers which they will fatten on grass, finish off on barley next fall and return to the market when fully ripe. They intend to treat 100 head in this way. We shall watch this experiment with interest.

Try Herb's mead, and you will use no other soda water.

Terry & Collins have the Acme Harrow for sale. The Acme is the most complete and the cheapest pulverizer in the field. You should see this machine before buying any other pulverizer. We have used two of the old style and like them for all purposes better than any other harrow we ever used. It is the boss machine and no mistake.

Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels will positively appear at the opera house on Monday evening June 15th. Further notice next week.

The difficulties attending the procuring of papers for incorporation of steam threshing men's association have been removed and a meeting is called for the 13th inst., at which the 165 pounds cold water pressure will be fully explained. A full attendance of all interested is desired.

Two sites for the new hotel are offered. One on the corner of Broadway and Fletcher is 75x150 and a very desirable one and can be had for $4,750. It is a very desirable property and well located and we learn that the amount necessary to secure it has been nearly all pledged. We hope this project will be carried to success as the benefits of such an institution can hardly be underestimated.

Attention is called to the locals and ad of Hack & Gallasch. This firm, successors to the old firm of Friedrich & Hack, one of the oldest in the city has seen its business increase to mammoth proportions and well deserve their success for the able manner in which their business is conducted. The boys spare no pains to please their customers, carrying everything that farmers require in their line and that of the best. They sell on very close margins and warrant their goods. The farmer who consults his own interest will interview Hack & Gallasch before buying elsewhere.

The new firm of Bray & O'Brien, whose big ad appears elsewhere in this issue, have secured the services of another experienced tinner and are now prepared to do all kinds of work in their line on short notice and at the closest figures. They will furnish estimates on all kinds of work such as roofing, cornice gutters, eave troughs, galvanized iron cornices etc., so that you can ascertain to a cent how much a job will cost. Mr. O'Brien makes a specialty of furnishing dairy outfits having had experince in that line. He did all of that kind of work for twelve butter and cheese factories at Elgin, Ill., and thoroughly understands all of the requirements of the dairy farmer. Call at their place, on Broadway and see what they can do for you.

O, gosh! Dick!

Horse-shoe-nails!

The Sand Hill River is tired of its old course and is now making its way over the prairie east of here.

Dr. E. A. Lyman, from Ada, is here, armed with a set of forceps and other instruments of torture.

Mr. Louis Foss passed through here on Monday on his way to Crookston.

Let's go swimming.

Mr. C. M. Ohl made a trip to Ada on Monday.

If you want to take lessons in throwing horse-shoe-nails, call at A. W. Mott & Co's store any time you please; if you wish to buy anything call some other time.

Mr. Daniel Haight and family have returned from Iowa. Dan looks as hale and hearty as he ever did. Iowa must be a pretty good State after all in spite of hertectotalism.

A. W. Mott is the champion horse-shoe-nail pitcher. He won the prize at our last match game.

Iver Ingebrightson, civil engineer from Aldal, is now clerking at A. W. Mott & Co's again. We are glad he has let his cheerful countenance shine upon us once again, and dispel some of our every-day gloom.

Dentist Lyman says he never worked so hard in his life. The timid little lady patient says she had the nicest time imaginable, staying all day at the dentist's office to have two teeth extracted. —Oh!

D. 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 10th day of January A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 32, 43 and 41, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $630, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 10th day of January 1887, with interest thereon from date, until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the time said interest became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-three (23,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-five (45) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 26th day of June A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 40, 41 and 41, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $650, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 10th day of January 1887, with interest thereon from date, until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the time said interest became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. An Agricultural Fair.

Several prominent farmers have expressed the wish that an agricultural fair be held in Polk County this fall and the idea strikes us very favorably. We know that Polk County is now in shape that she need not be ashamed to show her stock—in fact she has every reason to be proud of her progress in this particular. We believe that if it was all gathered in one place it would open the eyes of more than one man to what is going on in the county. Here to accomplish this is the point. We believe that all who have good stock to show would be willing to show it should the opportunity occur and this should be made the special business of some prominent farmer who would take enough interest in the matter to make it a success. It could be done in that way, and there should be a town organization of farmers in every township to aid in all such matters.

Marshall County Leader: District court closed at noon on Wednesday, after eight days of very successful labor. It was decided the smoothest and most pleasant term of court we ever attended. Judge Reynolds is a pleasant, patient, pains-taking judge, and when he has occasion to sit down on a fellow, he does it in a manner that makes the victim feel as though he ought to say "thank you, sir," instead of finding fault; and his unostentatious and gracious manner of handling his court, at once forbids ill-nature and wrangling among attorneys and litigants, and thus, instead of snarling, snapping, scalping bee, his court moves along more in the order of a dignified business and social gathering. And the attorneys, jurors litigants, and all interested in the business of the term vied with each other in complimenting and praising the new judge.

[illegible]ole: Beautifying door-yards [illegible] the chief occupation of man in this place, and if it goes on there will be few places to be found that will surpass us in this regard. Alderman Chiniquy is a master hand of this art. The newspaper man never gets enough ahead to spare a dollar for this purpose so he is excused:

Say now, you stop! Havn't we raked and raked and scolded in the frantic endeavor to faithfully obey the mandate of our city dads in this particular? And don't every load of hay brought to town go right over that lot and every team eat its rations on that lot and fill our soul with grief and vexation? If there is any one thing we do brag about it is our care for that same lot and we dislike to have you rob us of our laurels so ruthlessly! Come now, neighbor, take it all back, won't you?

MOORHEAD, May 28th, 1885.

Editor Polk County Journal:

Have received a letter from R. C. Judson, Secretary Minnesota Dairyman's Association, saying: "Additional lecturers to those already mentioned have agreed to come. Gov. Hubbard, State Auditor Braden and Gen. Baker have promised to go with us. Prof. Henry, of Wisconsin, cannot go with us but will be at Moorhead Thursday night or Friday morning. As most of the members will be accompanied by their wives, we anticipate an unusually pleasant time. We shall probably leave St. Paul by special train after an early breakfast, and make a few short stops on the way up. Now, let me say to you that you want to make calculations for a tremenduous crowd, for we are coming with our families. Seventeen lecturers have promised to attend, and among them the best in the dairy field; in fact, we must have this meeting at your city (Moorhead) the largest and best ever held in the United States; and from the present outlook it will be. We shall get out our circulars as soon as I can see the President and will send you some for distribution. I have secured special rates over the C. M. & St. P., St. P. M. & O., St. Paul & Duluth, West Wisconsin and N. P. railroads to St. Paul express pay one way and return free for exhibits."

So we expect the grandest time ever seen in the Northwest. Yours, truly,

F. J. SCHREIBER.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

Office 637 F. St., Washington, D. C.

PRACTICE.

The word "district" in acts of March 3d, 1877, and June 9th, 1880, relating to final proofs, refers to judicial and not land districts. (Commr. to W. J. Mooney, April 1st, 1885.)

HOMESTEADS.

(Augustus vs. Swisher, Comm'r, May 6th, 1885.)

ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD.

[illegible] a second additional H'd entry. (Expart Thornton Acting Secr'y. April 30th, 1885.)

PREEMPTIONS.

No inflexible rule can be formulated as to what constitutes good faith in settlement and residence. Condition of party and circumstances in each case considered. (Thornton vs. Ricard. Acting Secr'y. April 30th, 1885.

2d. Occasional visits to land and scant improvements not evidence of good faith. (Cleaves vs. French. Secr'y. April 30th, 1885.)

3. Application of claimant for the cancellation of his filing without prejudice upon the ground of a prior settlement on the tract, rejected because it was only alleged that prior settler had performed a few trivial acts of settlement, were not followed up by residence. (Exparte Birch. Comm'r. May 20th, 1885.)

TIMBER CULTURE.

Contest affidavit against T. C. entry may be made upon information and belief. It should be accompanied by affidavit showing party's qualification, but will not be held defective on this account unless objection made at hearing. (Butler vs. Mohan, Acting Secr'y. April 30th, 1885.)

2d. Work done by entry man's vendor or agent equivalent to work done by himself. (Beeken vs. Martin Secr'y. April 19th, 1885.)

RE-ENTRY.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The essential foundation of a recognizable claim, not appearing, it should not be considered. (Peralta Grant. Comm'r. to Sur. General, Arizona, May 2d, 1885.)

RAILROADS.

A HEAVY AND WEIGHTY ARGUMENT FOR PROHIBITION.

BY GEORGE R. SCOTT.

A lady has asked me to write a lengthy argument in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. I can give her one that is over twelve miles long, without any stretching. Here it is:

It is stated that over 60,000 of the inhabitants of this country yearly fill drunkards' graves. Now if the bodies of these unfortunate beings were laid side by side it would be hard work to pack them so that there would be 5,000 to a mile, and it would therefore require twelve miles to take in the 60,000 dead dodies. Hitch up a good horse and it would consume at least an hour's time riding alongside of this horrible string of dead humanity. If you should try and walk the distance, for three hours you would be passing the slain of King Alcohol. If they were placed lengthways you would be from sunrise till ten o'clock at night in passing by them. What an argument as far as length is concerned!

It is not only a lengthy, but also a heavy argument. Sixty thousand dead bodies would at least weigh six million pounds. Surely no one can find fault with the lightness of prohibition reasoning.

Think of this row of slaughtered humanity, its ghastly appearance. The majority of the bodies barely covered with raiment, and the flesh bruised and discolored by what had caused "the candle of life to go out."

I hate to write about it. The very thought makes me shiver. Yet I am asked for arguments, and I give one that is over twelve miles in length and weighs over six million pounds.

Who compose this pile of decomposed bodies? They come from every grade of society. To make this road-bed (twelve miles long, and averaging over five feet wide) the intelligent as well as the illiterate have been cut down by the monster Drink curse.

Let us walk quietly along this human macadamized road, and see whose bones have been made to pave it. Young men who once were the pride of fond mothers, and women who once were greeted with the kindest kiss that a father could bestow. Here an aged toper whose iron constitution [illegible] poor, half-starved-looking corpse, tha, for a few years, walked around asking to be buried, and further along female forms that even yet bear evidence of past beauty. Heads covered with black hair are numerous, and if the facts could be known of the misery the victims have suffered, it would be wondered that any of them lived so long.

Rags, filth, groans, and curses have helped to harden this road. Tears of bitter anguish that have been shed help to keep down the dust. No electric lights on this avenue of death; it's dark, cold and dismal. The names of the dead are not even known in some cases; but on each body is stamped "L. M." (legalized murder.) How does it sound? Harshly, but true. Cover the victims up from the sight of men, and still the stench arises. And every hour adds fresh bodies to the already terrible row.

But the Government receives a certain amount per head; and this a Christian land!

Should not this wicked and disgraceful traffic in bodies and souls be prohibited? Town after town says "No!" Men claiming to be brave and good declare that the time for putting a stop to having miles of humanity yearly slain has not yet arrived.

Count me out of that class. I don't pretend to be very good; but the way I view it, it does not take a man or woman with an angelic heart to call a halt on such an inhuman trafic.

African slavery was awful; but the loss of life and misery caused by the manufacture and sale of intoxicants takes the prize for incarnate devilishness.

Good men of every Christian denomination and political party must help to put a stop to it.

Don't postpone the time for doing your whole duty. Last year the death-road was over twelve miles long; and unless immediate action is taken the year 1885 will have a still longer one.

Almost every day brings to our ears some new horror caused by drink. One has just reached us from Georgia. A young man married a young lady of a prominent family, carried her to his own home in a distant part of the State. In about a year, a younger sister was betrothed, and the married sister invited her, before her marriage, to spend a few weeks with her. The sister came. Instead of finding her married sister in a happy home, she was shocked to learn that the young husband was already a blasted wreck of a man, had already the delirium tremens. He came home and retired to a room separate from that occupied by his wife. The two sisters slept together. In the night the husband came rushing into the room with a pistol, yelling and declaring that serpants were after him. Springing towards the bed, he fired five bullets into the quivering body of his wife, each one of which was deadly, and then seizing the young sister, dragged her from the bed and sent a bullet crashing through her brain! Is it any wonder that Georgia is wheeling into the ranks of Prohibition?—[Exchange.

A WORD FOR GUERNSEYS.

From the Farm, Stock and Home.

The popularity and usefulness of Jersey cattle in this country are assured. The farmers on the island of Jersey have jealously guarded their cattle for a great many years, and produced a race of cows of which they may justly feel proud. As far back as 1789, the Isle of Jersey—which still retains its ancient privilege of self-government—passed a stringent law, prohibiting the importation of cattle from France, but there has not been, until a recent period, any legal restricions against the introduction of cattle from England or Guernsey and the adjacent islands. There is abundant evidence to show, however, the care that has been taken to produce a pure breed and preserve its purity. Thomas Quale, who wrote in 1812, and is more widely quoted as authority on Jersey cattle matters than any other writer on the subject, says: "The general purity of the breed is guarded by the rooted opinions of the inhabitants, rather better than by the sanctions of law."

The same authority considers the Jerseys and Guernseys essentially the same, although the latter deviates from the common type and presents a greater affinity with the races of Normandy. The breeders in Guernsey, while preserving the quality of richness in milk have had an eye to increased size. The average size is greater than Jerseys, probably from 20 to 25 per cent., which, with not a few dairy farmers, is a point of interest. An American who has visited the Channel Islands and examined the cattle on all of them, informs us that many Guernsey cattle have sufficient size and such form as to make them fair animals for the butcher, are nearly alike in leading characteristics.

The Guernseys may be commended to those who, while liking the Jerseys as especially adapted to butter dairies, prefer larger animals. The Guernseys give very rich milk, and the butter is naturally of high color.

GUERNSEY CATTLE.

The sturdy Guernseyman has departed less in his breeding from the original type of his butter cow than the Jerseyman. A century ago her merits were so fully appreciated that it was determined that the introduction of any foreign blood must be undesirable, and in 1789 a law was passed by the Insular Legislature forbidding the importation of any cow, heifer, bull or calf, under a penalty of 200 livres and the forfeiture of the boat and tackle which should bring them, and a further penalty of 50 livres on any sailor on board who should fail to inform of the importation. Since that date it is probable that the cattle of the island of Guernsey have remained as absolutely pure as any breed that is known. The aim that has animated these many years of care has been to produce a cow as perfect as possible for the dairy of luxury—a cow to produce milk and cream of marvelous richness, and butter that in grain, flavor, and golden color excels that of any and all other breeds. The most remarkable characteristic of the Guernsey is the richness of the animal. It is seen in every point. The horn is soft and full of color; the hoofs are usually like tortoise shell; the skin is soft and of a golden yellow tint, and the inside of the ears is still more highly colored, while the same orange hue seems to glow from the bag, as if there were light under the soft skin. In the mature, well-bred animal both eye and hand find evidence that all secretions are rich and of high quality, and a careful examination prepares the mind for understanding why the butter made from Guernsey cream possesses qualities that are not obtainable from the milk of any other animal. The disposition of these cattle is remarkably gentle and affectionate. On the Island their care is usually confided to women and children, whose gentle ways are reflected in the quiet demeanor of their family favorites. Almost all the milk produced by the cattle of Guernsey is made into butter. This butter is carried to the handsome stone market building of St. Petersport, where the matrons sit awaiting their customers with their pats of golden butter daintily displayed in the deep green leaves of the Guernsey cabbage. It invariably commands the highest price on the Island and in England. When Mr. Ledyard was there its price was eighteen cents per pound above that made on the sister island of Jersey. The cattle on the Island are in almost all instances tethered, and have but very little food beyond the grasses that in so moist a climate afford pasturage during nearly all the year. Although little or no grain is fed the yield of butter from a mature Guernsey cow is expected to average a pound a day for the year, and there are many trustworthy statements of cows making 14 and 15 Guernsey pounds of butter, equal to 16 and 18 pounds of our weight, per week, without the forcing food that in this country has ruined many a fine cow by unnatural stimulation for the purpose of making a great butter record.

When I commenced with Guernseys I found that the milk of one, mingled with that of fifteen grade Short-horns and grade Jerseys, gave a fine tinge of color to the united product. Later, with Guernseys only in my winter dairy, the butter has been of rich, golden color, and had at all times the flavor that rich [redacted] cates when natural. at the Guernsey is of a large class of viceable and profitable following reasons: ernsey is eminently eminently a dairy farmer. lity, and especially yellow color of the annot be excelled or r breed. uantity of milk is is well kept up to calving, and that as much (if not more) butter can be made from it as from that of any other breed.

4th. That, being also a substantial good-sized animal, with the tendency to fatten rapidly when dried off, the sources of profit to her owner are increased.

5th. That it is a particularly quiet, gentle, and tractable breed.

6th. That the oxen are large, strong, and intelligent, and fatten readily when put up to be fed, making good beef.

7th. That the calves are of good size and hardy.

8th. That its grades are strongly marked with its characteristics.

L. W. LEDYARD.

I. J. Clapp and N. K. Fairbank, noted breeders of Guernseys, says of this fine breed that is now attracting much attention:

"Our own experience with the Guernsey covers nearly four years. They have been with us through all the vicissitudes of climate. We have brought them direct from quarantine, and they have stood the variations of climate and temperature remarkably well. We have kept them side by side with other breeds of milk and butter cows until we are confirmed in our opinion that they are the best breed of dairy cows for the West. Their fine size, and noble, sturdy look, make them attractive, while their gentle dispositions render them great pets. Their fine flow of rich milk and the high color which they impart to their butter place them beyond competition as butter cows, and their good-sized teats make them free milkers. They are good feeders and will stand feeding remarkably well. They have a great attraction for the general farmer as well as the dairyman.

Cattle Parade.

Minneapolis Evening Journal: The fine street parade of the handsome herd of Holstein Friesian cattle last evening, was seen by at least fifty thousand people, and was the talk of the town last night. The sidewalks all along the route were crowded with people, particularly Washington and Nicollet avenues, and the sight was a very pretty one. The sharp contrast of the clear black and clear white markings of their silky coats, gives this beautiful breed of cattle a wonderful attractive appearance, especially when a number of them are gathered in a herd. To experts in stock the fine breeding of the animals was evident and was very generally remarked. The fact is that no better of this best of all dairy breeds exists in the United States than that to which these beauties belong, and which has been kept for two years in Swift County. The herd of one hundred and sixty head is so well known among the dairymen of the State that men travel hundreds of miles to see it, and we believe it is a part of the programme of the State Dairymens Association which meets at Moorhead this month, to halt their train at Brookside Farm on purpose to get a view of the herd on their prairie pastures. These cattle were brought to Minnesota by Hon. V. G. Hush, Capt. A. G. Wilcox, and Geo. F. Jackson, of Minneapolis, who with Col. W. W. Liggett of Benson, Minn., made up the company known as the Northwestern Importers and Breeders' Association. The annual sale of these fine cattle, the best dairy cattle in the world, will be an immense advantage to the agricultural interests, and the enterprising men who have introduced them to the northwest deserve credit and profit accordingly.

THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.—Rural World.

HOLSTEIN CATTLE.

First Sale of This Herd This Side of Chicago.

St. Paul Globe.

The first annual sale of Holstein-Friesian cattle, and indeed the very first public sale of these fine cattle this side of Chicago, took place yesterday afternoon at the fair ground, under the auspices of the Northwestern Importers' and Breeders' Association. Stock breeders from all over the State were present and the competition ran high for choice heads. J. A. Mason, of Kalamazoo, swung the mallet in approved style and entertained the bidders at the same time. In all there were thirty-six head sold, the total amount paid being $10,414, or an average of $289,30 a head. The highest price for a single head was paid by A. P. & W. R. Tanner, of Moorhead, $605, for Kuperus Namkje, an imported Friesland cow. The sales were as follows:

A. P. & W. R. Tanner, Moorhead—Kuperus Namkje, $605; the Baron, $340; Athena, $250; Wignia, $400; Reinskje, $335; Dora 3d, $400.

A. J. Smith, Osseo—Vincen, $205; Rhea, $145; Melia, $330; Neinke, $330; Psyche, $155; Komaroff, $100.

I. C. Seely, Minneapolis—Juna, $300; Beth, $300; Emmetje, $320; Tulip Konig, $290; Winsumer, $350; Hoxsie, $100.

Gov. J. S. Pillsbury, for the State University—Jennie, $255; Albertje 3d, $255; Blijd, $450; Wietske 5th, $300; Betsey, $430; Valentine, $580.

Walter Coleman, Madison, Dakota—Faust, $225.

John Blaisdell, Minneapolis—Priam, $205.

T. H. Wood, Litchfield—Wilheim, $310.

H. W. Heinen, Jordan, Minn.—Ambrosia, $325.

E. D. Meldrum, Asbye, Minn.—Grover, $325.

E. F. Erwin, Litchfield—Le Claire, $195.

Robert Fotherby, Cannon Falls—Ibsen, $250.

H. C. Butler, Minneapolis—Kathleen, $250.

James Davis, Bloomington—Imogen, $210.

L. A. Caznov, Moorhead—Reitzumer, $235.

B. S. Bull, Minneapolis—Mignon, $250.

E. D. Childs & Co., Carman—Olga, $200.

While some of these figures are high, none are considered especially fancy, and those who purchased were well satisfied with their bargains. The cattle showed up in splendid form, and seem destined to be popular with breeders. The cross with natives is excellent, and for deep milkers the Holstein cows are unexcelled.

Lost His Ear.

Ada Journal: O. H. Myran was in bad luck on Sunday last. He went out with some friends inspecting the country east. The party had two rigs and coming home at a pretty good pace they somehow managed to collide. Mr. Myran was thrown forward like a shot and his head struck the forward wheel of his own buggy and he was thrown in under the other buggy. The horses were unmanageable and the wonder was he was not instantly killed. As it was, when he was thrown from his seat, his right ear grazed the wheel and cut it off slick and clean with the exception of a small part of the lobe. He was also severely bruised about the head and face. His companions afterwards very injudiciously cut off that part of the ear yet hanging on, thus preventing, perhaps, its being sewed back again and all right. No one else was hurt, and Mr. Myran will get an artificial ear put on him which will not be a tin ear either.

Ada Index: While out for a ride last Sunday, out west of Ada three miles and a half on Marsh River, our curiosity was aroused in seeing what is called a wind mill, owned by Peter Nelson. We went over to see it, and were welcomed by Mr. Nelson. It is a good deal like a round water tank, about 20 feet high, its circumferance around the upper story is about 20 feet, and lower story about 40 feet. He has a feed grinder inside, and when convenient puts the canvass on the mill-wings and grinds enough to supply himself and his neighbors. He says, if built large enough and supplied with the necessary machinery, it would make a good flour mill.

Peterson's Magazine comes to us for July, an unusually brilliant number, even for it. There is a beautiful steel-plate; a double-size colored fashion; a double-size colored pattern in embroidery, and about fifty other engravings, mostly of fashion, work table, and things interesting to ladies. The literary contents are even better than usual. They lead off with an illustrated article on the "Moated Mansions of the Olden Time," suggested by Tennyson's well-known poem "Mariana." Then comes a powerful novelet, "The Passway of Peril," by Mrs. M. Sheffey Peters; a weird tale, by Adelaide Merriman; one of Frank Benedict's best love stories, Mrs. Stephens' pathetic novel; other tales, poetry, etc. We know no lady's book that affords so much, and of such high merit, for so little money. The price is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs, and elegant premiums to persons getting up clubs. Everybody ought to take "Peterson." Now is a good time to subscribe, a new volume beginning with this number. Speciments are sent, gratis, if written for in good faith. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Opposed to License.

Worcester, Mass., April 21: For the first time in the history of the city, the Catholic clergy appeared before the aldermen, last night, to remonstrate against the granting of liquor licenses. Rev. Thos. Griffin, of St. John's church, said that there were eight applicants for licenses, on the street where his church was located. It was not in the interest of morals, that one should be granted and he would hold the Board culpable, if it was done. There were 6,000 people, including 1,200 children, on the street, every Sunday. Only last evening, a little boy, eleven years old, was brought to the parochial residence, in a state of intoxication. The street is honeycombed with such places.

Rev. Jno. J. McCoy, said the saloons, on that street, sell to the children, as well as to men. He protested against licenses, in the name of over 700 temperance people, because he knew that the souls of his people, were going down to hell with this curse.

Dear Review: Just a word to our sister workers in the Unions and Sunday Schools. The Dakota County S. S. Convention was held in Hastings on Wednesday and Thursday of last week. Through the solicitation of Mrs. D. Chamberlain, County W. C. T. U. Superintendent, the Secretary appointed fifty minutes of its time to the discussion of temperance teaching in Sunday schools.

The State W. C. T. U. President was invited to occupy the time and also to speak on temperance, in the evening, at the Presbyterian church.

The time set apart for the consideration of this most important subject, was improved by showing the necessity for temperance teaching in Sunday schools. First: because it is impossible to get the thought of God's word into the minds of children, if the plain practical enforcement of total abstinence is left out. The law of God written in the physical structure of our being is so exactly in harmony with the moral law, that the man of God, or woman of God, to be thoroughly furnished for life's battle and the conquest of sin, outward and inward, must be well instructed in each law.

The time has come when to simply read over the questions and answers to the lesson helps must end. It is not teaching God's holy word. It is not making the children wise unto salvation. It is simply mockery—trifling with most precious and solemn opportunities.

The soul and mind of the teacher must be filled with the love of Christ; with the law of Christ, and with the temperance laws of God, whose observance will preserve the beautiful house of the man wonderful from self destruction and cause him to know that he is his brother's keeper and responsible for his well being, and the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

No man can be a bible christian in these days of light, who is found on the side of upholding licensed saloons—on the side which is opposed to prohibition, to the work of the W. C. T. U. and to the teaching of temperance wherever it can be properly taught to children and youth.

Mrs. Hobart next enquired where were the young men who ought to be in the bible classes in our Sunday schools? They were not in the places assinged to them. Their seats were vacant. Why? They had, in too many instances, been ensnared by tobacco and tippling. They had been tempted and caught by wily saloon keepers. They have never been taught, when little boys and in the Sunday school, these great temperance truths and laws which would have made them wise unto salvation. By ignorance they are lost.

The evening hour was devoted to an earnest plea for scientific temperance instruction in our public schools.

Dear sisters, in the Sunday School Conventions, in your Counties, speak out on this vitally important theme of teaching temperance to the boys while we have them; of so instructing them that they will not, in their "teens" and early manhood, fall because of their ignorance, into the traps and snares of the destroyer.

By a few kindly, wise suggestions, you may have an hour set apart for the use of the W. C. T. U. in conventions. Improve these occasions. We must teach and influence and scatter seed truths, until the church and the Sabbath schools of our State see and feel and believe that sobriety and obediance to God's moral and physical laws, must be the forerunners of the reign of truth and righteousness. Beloved let us be up and doing, urging by all our tact and zeal, this thought of temperance teaching in Sunday schools and public schools.

Yours, for saving our youth,
H. A. HOBART.

Revival in Georgia.

To the Editor of the Witness.

I have been carrying on a series of meetings in my church, viz., the A. M. E. church, for several weeks, and great have been the results. The church has been revived greatly. Many have been converted to Christ. Ninety-one souls have been brought into the church since we commenced the meetings, and, though we have closed, many more are groaning for redemption, and will possibly be soon brought to the knowledge of the love of Christ. Thre months since we voted whiskey out of this county, and many thought that ministers would suffer because they had taken a stand against the sale of whiskey, but since that time we have waged war against the devil, and he has been trembling before the ark of God. Both white and colored churches have been engaged in the fight. I think that more than 300 souls have been added to the churches since the whiskey question has been settled at the polls. Virtue must triumph, evil must come down; the monster must be destroyed, and the church, I trust, will lead in putting her foot upon the head of the monster.

Athens, Ga., May 19.

A Sad Story.

John B. Gough tells the following: "A minister of the gospel told me one of the most thrilling incidents I have ever heard in my life. A member of his congregation came home for the first time in his life intoxicated, and his boy met him on the door-step, clapping his hands and exclaiming: 'Papa has come home!' He seized the boy by the shoulder, swung him around, staggered, and fell in the hall. The minister said to me: 'I spent the night in that house I went out, bared my brow that the night air might fall upon it and cool it. I walked up and down the hall. There was his child dead! there was his wife in strong convulsion, and he asleep.' A man about thirty years of age asleep with a dead child in the house, having a blue mark upon the temple where the corner of the marble steps had come in contact with the head as he swung him around, and a wife upon the brink of the grave! 'Mr. Gough,' said my friend, 'I cursed the drink. He had told me that I must remain until he awoke, and I did.'

When he awoke he passed his hand over his face and exclaimed, 'What is the matter? Where am I? Where is my boy?' 'You cannot see him. 'Stand out of my way. I will see my boy.' To prevent confusion I took him to the child's bed, and I turned down the sheet and showed him the corpse, he uttered a wild shriek, 'Ah! my child!' That minister said further to me, 'One year after that he was brought from a lunatic asylum to lie side by side with his wife in the grave, and I attended his funeral.'

The minister of the gospel who told me that fact is to-day a drunken hostler in a stable in Boston. Now, tell me what rum will not do. It will debase, imbrute and damn everything that is noble, bright, glorious and godlike in a human being. There is nothing drink will not do that is vile, dastardly, cowardly, sneaking or hellish. Why are we not to fight it till the day of our death?"

BARLOW & WILSON'S MINSTRELS.

This popular minstrel company opened a three-nights' engagement at the Opera House last evening with a sample of the audiences it has drawn ever since it has begun its seventh annual tour. The large theatre was entirely filled above and below. The performance was very much enjoyed, as there was not a mediocre act in it, and new songs and sketches have been provided throughout. Every song in the first part was encored, and the skating carnival, which formed the climax, was received with shouts of laughter.—[Cleveland Leader.

COUNTY NEWS.

Fisher Bulletin.

Farmers tell us that their crops are looking better than they ever did before at this time of the year.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, were in Fisher on Saturday and Sunday last, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. Freeman.

Mr. Pettit, whose home is in the southern part of this State, arrived in Fisher on Saturday last to visit his daughter, Mrs. A. Stewart. He is 75 years old.

A number of Crookston's young folks were seen driving through the streets of Fisher on Sunday last. It is a nice drive between these two points, particularly at this season of the year, for one can so much enjoy the beautiful scenery that stretches out in every direction as far as the eye can reach.

As a change has been made in the pastorship of the M. E. church at this place, we have been informed by Mr. M. Sanaker that Rev. Mr. C. F. Brown has been appointed to take charge of the church and will locate here permanently. This change has been made on account of the field being too large for Rev. Geo. Merritt to do justice in carrying on the good work both at Ada and Fisher. We cordially welcome Rev. C. F. Brown and family to our midst. They recently came to this country from London, England, where they have spent several years in mission work.

Crookston is very anxious to secure the services of the Rev. Father Lawlor, but we beg respectfully to inform them that all the samee, they cannot get him. We have a slight idea that our Irish friends, and for all that matter all Fisher, would "up guards and at 'em" the moment that the scheme seemed at all like success. Father Lawlor is the first good resident Catholic priest Fisher ever had, and we don't intend to let a good thing go if we know it. We not, however, blame our Crookston friends.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 11th, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one thousand one hundred and thirty and 83-100 dollars ($1130.83-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas H. Perkins a widower, mortgagor, to Thomas B. Hill, mortgagee, bearing date the thirtieth day of November A. D. 1883, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the thirtieth day of November A. D. 1883, at 2:25 o'clock p. m. in book "M" of mortgages on pages 554 to 556, which said mortgage was given to secure a certain principal promisory note of $1,000 bearing even date with said mortgage and due November first A. D. 1888 with interest thereon from date until paid payable annually as per five coupon notes attached thereto and described therein and on said mortgage. Default having been made in the payment of the coupon of $76.75 being the annual interest on said principal note due November 1st A. D. 1884, and the interest due on said coupon since said November 1st A. D. 1884, and there being a provision in said mortgage authorizing the holder thereof in case of default of any of the conditions therein contained to foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas by reason of said default the power of sale contained therein has become and is operative, the mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said principal note should become due and immediately payable according to the provisions of said note and mortgage securing the same, and no action or preceeding having been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section number twenty (20,) in Township number one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range number forty-seven (47) west, containing 160 acres of land according to the government survey thereof in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 10th day of August A. D. 1885, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage, in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

THE VALUE OF HOLSTEINS.

Last week we gave an account of the animals sold at the old fair grounds in Minneapolis on the 4th inst., by the Northwestern Breeders' Association. We find this week an account, given by the Farmers' Tribune, which gives the pedigrees of each animal as well as the prices obtained. There are those who will consider the prices paid as enormous when the fact is that those animals all sold at remarkably low figures and every animal secured is a prize to its fortunate possessor. Note the character of those buyers and you will find them to be all men of shrewd business qualifications—men who know the value of those animals. They bought them to make money and they will make big money at the prices paid. We are glad that so many of them were bought for this upper country. E. D. Childs secured a prize in "Olga" which is one of the finest heifers in the herd, worth more than double what he paid for her. "VALENTINE," the fine young bull purchased by Ex-Gov. J. S. Pillsbury, for $580 is the mate to "EVERETT," J. O. Milne's fine bull, which is now on Section 8 in Crookston for the use of Polk County farmers. We append the Tribune's report and comments as follows:

"The Northwestern Importers and Breeders Association's first annual sale of Holstein cattle, at the driving park Thursday afternoon, was well attended and a lively interest was taken in the sale of every animal offered. It was the first public auction of Holstein cattle that has been held west of Chicago, and breeders from all over the State availed themselves of the opportunity to make purchases. Among the gentlemen interested in fine stock who were present were M. D. Hoard and P. B. Nettleton, Montevideo; Isaac Millner, Casselton; S. Beidelman, Sauk Centre; A. J. Smith, Osseo; E. D. Childs, Carman; W. R. Tanner, Moorhead; G. H. Smith, Osseo; L. A. Casanove, Moorhead; John Davis, Bloomington; Robert Fotherby, Cannon Falls; E. F. Irwin, Litchfield; E. D. Meldrum, Aabye; Henry H. Heinen, Jordan; T. H. Wood, Litchfield; Walter Coleman, Madison, Dak.; Ex-Gov. J. S. Pillsbury, H. F. Brown, B. S. Bull, Colonel R. S. Innes, Aaron Neill, William McCague, Wm. Baird, I. C. Seeley, H. C. Butler and John Blaisdell, of Minneapolis.

The Northwestern Importers' and Breeders' Association is composed of Messrs. V. G. Hush, A. G. Wilcox and G. F. Jackson, of this city, and W. M. Liggett, of Benson. The association owns a fine stock farm near Benson, and at present has a herd of 160 Holsteins, all imported or the direct descendants of imported stock. At the sale yesterday thirty-six head were offered, including six calves. All of the cattle over 2 years old were imported, the remainder being stock raised at the Benson farm. At 1 o'clock Colonel J. A. Mann, of Kalamazoo, the well-known stock auctioneer, mounted a box in the big cattle stable and began the sale. Before 5 o'clock the entire herd had been sold. The total amount bid for the thirty-six head was $10,415, an average price of $289.32. The principal buyers were A. P. and W. R. Tanner, of Moorhead, and Ex-Governor J. S. Pillsbury, whose purchases were made for the Agricultural department of the State university. The Messrs. Tanner bought six head, paying $2,330. The highest price bid for a single animal was $605, which was given by them for Kuperus Namkje, a valuable imported cow, calved March 1879. She is a fine breeder, and can easily attain a milk record of eighty pounds per day. The Messrs. Tanner also purchased for $400 Wijnia Wommels, a handsomely marked 3-year old heifer, and one of the finest in the lot. Blijd, a fine yellow-skinned cow, 6 years old, brought $450, and Betsy, a beautiful 2-year old show heifer sold for $480. Both these animals were purchased by Governor Pillsbury, who secured six head altogether. The most important of his purchases was Valentine, a show bull of much symmetry, calved April, 1883, and an animal that has been very successfully tested as a breeder. The sales were as follows:

THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

WHITE BEANS.

It may not be out of place to remind our readers of the case with which they can grow a small plantation of white beans, at least enough to supply the home with them during the fall and winter to come. They may be planted as late as June 20, and will usually do well. Planted in drills and cultivated thoroughly by the horse hoe or cultivator, very little labor is required. They are well worth the farmers attention.

M. C. Malone has moved his stock into the Jacobus building, corner of Broadway and Robert street. He carries a large stock of hardware, furniture and groceries. Call at his new stand and examine his goods and get prices. A big stock of fresh family groceries, canned fruits, tobacco and cigars on tap.

The Barlow & Wilson Minstrel Troupe held forth at the Opera House on Monday evening to a full house. When we say it was the best entertainment of the kind ever given in this city, we are saying a great deal, for we have had none but good ones. Barlow and Wilson were hosts in themselves and the balance of the troupe did as well in their several parts. The audience was kept in a roar of laughter during the entire entertainment.

An accident occurred at Northcote on Monday, about noon, by which a young man, Ed. Evans, son of Dr. Evans, of Minneapolis, came near losing his life. He was at work on the top of the new elevator and was in some way knocked off of the cupola, falling to the ground, a distance of 60 feet. Both arms and one leg was broken, several teeth knocked out, and his palate split open. His injuries were attended to and he is now in a fair way to recovery.

The celebration of St. John's Day promises to be the biggest time of the kind ever seen in Crookston. The procession will form at 10 a. m. at the Opera House and march to Barrett's grove where the exercises will be held. The Ada base ball club and the Fisher Cornet Band are expected. A grand program is being arranged which will be out in a few days. Let all who enjoy a good time be on deck ready for the grand celebration on the 24th.

Up to the hour of going to press we have been unable to hear anything definite from President Schreiber, of the Dairyman's Association beyond the letters we have already published. As yet the agent has received no notice in relation to tickets and we cannot say anything positive as to what the fare will be. It seems strange that after so much has been done to get Polk County farmers interested in this important meeting we should be thus, apparently, slighted, though we are forced to the impression that it must be an oversight. We should advise everybody who can afford to do so to make arrangements to go, as the meeting promises to be the most important ever held in the State, and if Polk County is well represented we can doubtless secure the next meeting in this county.

F. M. Finch was up from St. Paul last week to see how matters stand on his farms at Euclid. He says he never saw finer crops than he has this year and that he thinks he has the finest stand of trees on his tree-claim in the county. F. M. says Polk County beats 'em all for grain and stock.

Somebody perpetrated a great joke on the boys at the fire. After the blaze was all out an inquisitive fireman anxious to have it all right requested a chap with a lantern to investigate more closely. Going into the building the chap aforesaid, opened the door to the ice house and the reflection of the light of the lantern gave the solid blocks of ice the appearance of being all ablaze. Going out the fireman secured help and turned the nozzle full on the ice box and played upon that ice until it was nearly all melted, by which time the joke was discovered and the boys put up the hose directly.

Drop in at the Palace Jewelry Store, of Berthiaume Bro's., and see what they can do for you.

Terryll & Miller arrived last week and will engage in the slate roofing business in our city. The composition that they use is called Terryll's Liquid Slating and is warranted to preserve old shingles and make them as good as new and to protect the roof from fire. They have been at work in Detroit, Minn., during the spring and their work is there very favorably commented upon. They are going to put a slate roof upon THE JOURNAL office and we shall be better prepared to speak of its merits later. By all that we can learn of it, however, we are inclined to think it is a very good thing. A sample of what it is may be seen on this office after to-day. If your roof requires patching or re-shingling don't fail to try the liquid slating. A new roof will be made to last a lifetime by its use.

Arthur Stewart is the happy father of a bouncing baby boy since Wednesday morning.

Henry Lewis returned yesterday from a visit to his old home down river. He reports times wonderfully and fearfully quiet down there and says he is glad to get back where there is something doing. He thinks we might expect a stampede from there if the inhabitants could get away.

ANOTHER FIRE.

About 1:25 Wednesday morning the fire bell gave warning of another blaze, and the department turned out to find a healthy in Couvrette's meat market on Broadway. The fire had gained great headway before the first stream was turned on but it did not do much thereafter. The building adjoining, occupied by Date & Co. as a paint shop was slightly damaged. John McLean owned the meat market building and is part owner of the other one. No insurance on buildings. Mr. Couvrette had just put $500 insurance on his stock of meats, furniture and tools, in the Underwriters. Mr. McLean informs us that he intends to rebuild at once. The fire was evidently of incendiary origin.

COUNTY NEWS.

Fisher Bulletin.

The saw mill whistle at Crookston can be heard here in Fisher most any day.

Mrs. Hugh Thompson has been visiting with her numerous friends in Crookston the most of this week.

The public school of Fisher will not close until July 3d, as Prof. Casey thinks the weather will keep cool up to that time.

Mr. Fred D. Krayenbuhl, the former proprietor of Mr. T. A. Dunlava's hardware store, was in town on Monday and Tuesday.

The hundreds of trees that have lately been set out in Fisher are looking nicely. They will add great beauty to the village in about five years.

The lumber for the new roller flouring mill arrived the first of the week, since which time work on the same has been pushed forward rapidly.

Red Lake Falls Messenger.

The grass crop promises to be heavy this year.

Farmers are happy at prospects of good crops and high prices.

Mrs. C. Kretzschmar was taken seriously ill last Sunday while visiting her sister, Mrs. W. A. Schreiter, and it will be a week or two before she can be moved home.

BELRAMI ITEMS.

More rain.

Did you write that?

Oh yes, you bet!

Iver Ingebrigtson visited his dear old homestead at Aldal last Sunday. On his way back he was employed in laying out a road in the town of Liberty.

There was a dance in the new school house at Connery's last Monday night.

Lewis Hanson and Matt Olson, from Ada, were in town last week. What in the world could induce them to leave their beauteous homes and run at large from farm to farm, up here? They are deeply interested in the welfare of our farmers.

Peter Onstad makes himself conspicuous with a new scull-cap. Mr. Mott says Pete loves it so well he keeps it on both day and night.

The elevator company have sunk an artesian well one hundred and forty-eight feet deep, which supplies the whole town with water.

Mr. Geo. C. Reis has been ill for some time. Last week he went down to St. Paul to seek medical advice.

Street crossings and rubber boots are in great demand at present.

Church services in the school house a week ago last Sunday was a surprise. The key to the school house was in safe keeping and the people dispersed before the meeting commenced.

It is whispered that a new elevator will be built here this summer.

AUDITOR.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

By the Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior, prepared and reported semi-monthly for the Polk County Journal by Archibald Young, Attorney at Law and late Examiner of Mining, Railroad, Homestead, Pre-emption and other contest cases in General Land Office. Office 637 F. St., Washington, D. C.

PRACTICE.

Notice of contest sufficient if published once in each week for four successive weeks. (Erickson vs. Anderson. Acting Secretary. May 8, 1885.)

HOMESTEADS.

A party having served four years in the military service will be required to reside upon and cultivate the land for one year before making his homestead proof. (Commissioner. June 5, 1885.)

2d. The residence required is actual, bona fide inhabitancy, and absence of claimant's family from land must be explained. (Commissioner. June 4, 1885.)

3d. The demands of a lucrative business elsewhere is no excuse for claimants non-residence, nor could the residence of his wife for a few weeks at a time be construed as personal residence by him. (Overecker vs. McGovern. Assistant Commissioner. May 19, 1885.)

TIMBER CULTURE.

Land not subject to timber culture entry unless the section is destitute of timber. (Dotson vs. Thomas. Commissioner. May 27, 1885.)

MINERALS.

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

[This column is placed at the disposal of the Crookston W. C. T. U., who are cordially invited to fill it each week. ED. JOURNAL.]

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

PROHIBITION.

From the Sword and Shield, of Clinton, Miss.

No fact is more clear than that each State has power to make and enforce its own police regulations. This power in the State is as plain as that our supervisors have power over roads and bridges. The liquor men will not controvert this proposition for they all have tacitly acknowledged it in quietly yielding to the law that closes all saloons on election day. Now why is this thing done? Why does the law close saloons on election days? Because it is necessary as a police regulation. To preserve peace when large bodies of men are assembled with open liquor shops, is admitted to be an impossibility, hence it is necessary on those days to close the saloons in order that peace may the more easily abound.

Now, when the saloonist admits the propriety of shutting his saloon on election days, he admits two very important things very damaging to his interest—viz:

1. That liquor shops are disturbing elements, and

2. That the State has the right to close such shops on election days, as a police regulation.

If a man has an inherent constitutional right to sell liquor per se, then the State has no right to shut him up on election day. And if the State has the legal right to close up on any day or days as a disturbing foctor, then the State has the undoubted right to shut him up every day as a disturbing factor and one inimical to the police regulations of the country.

Man has the legal right to do anything not inhibited by the statutes of the State. He could sell slaves so long as the law permitted him to traffic in the article, and deliver the property. This he had a right to do. He could labor on Sunday till a Sabbath law was passed; he could open a gaming shop till the law bounced gambling, and he could open a brothel till society gave itself a higher key of reform music and insisted on a greater elevation of morals, and the interests of the few were subordinated to the welfare of the many and so all of these things were placed under legal interdict.

The liquor saloon still lingers. Law still protects and tolerates it, but nothing else does. The traffic now is antagonized by all the religious and moral forces of the land. Public opinion has outgrown it morally. The old sentiment that prevailed once in Massachusetts where a preacher was jailed for selling liquor on Sunday, and his flock desiring to still have his ministerial services, petitioned the authorities to extend the prison limits so as to embrace the church, so that while legally in jail, he still could preach to them, is gone to return no more. The traffic is throttled, tied up, boy-cotted, hemmed round with too many legal handicaps to live long. The seller has to run a petition, get a majority of signers, then print all his friends' names, then lie over a month, then all names found on both petitions are counted against him, then he must give a $2,000 bond, then pay a big license fee, then can't sell on election days, nor collect his debts by law, nor collect his debts by law, nor sell to a man drunk, or to a minor, or Indian, and yet people who have seen all these restraints around the traffic will argue that they have a constitutional right to sell it.

Why does this constitutional right not allow them to collect their debts at law? No other trade or calling is legally subjected to such ignominy. Will any one please tell us why?

Down With the Drink Habit!

Fellow reader, we believe you are with us in our denunciation of the use of ardent spirits.

Are you not?

Think of it!

In the thirteen leading nations in 1880, there were concumed, 5,659,029,674 gallons of beer, wine and spirits, which on an average of $2 a gallon makes an expenditure of $11,318,059,348 among 329,319,295 people.

It is estimated that the indirect loss from the use of such beverages is equal to the amount directly spent, or a total of over $22,000,000,000!

Moreover, think of unutterable misery produced, the woe, starvation, crime. In the United States alone over $900,000,000 is spent for drink, directly, and an equal sum is indirectly lost by the drinking habit of our people.

We are glad to note that the rural press, as a rule, is in favor of temperance. This movement is taking new ground every day, and it is certain, it seems to us, to sweep through the land.

The Rev. Dr. Cushing, of this city, who has made a special study of the matter, says that in this city, having 100,000 inhabitants, there are about 1,100 saloons to 400 groceries. Probably a similar proportion exists in many cities and towns and vilages!

Think of the ruin such places work! High license may reduce the number, but the evil is not abated.

The beer brewers say they have $250,000,000, more or less, of capital invested, and they demand protection from "fanatics!" But "fanatics" claim protection from them, and in the end the people will be with the "fanatics," and beer, mild and preferable as it is compared with ardent spirits, must go.

Throwing aside the moral considerations, for the time being, on economic grounds the drink habit must be discountenanced. It is a tremendous social evil. As such it is doomed and the day of its destruction hasteneth on apace.

Communicated.

Dr. Stone, of Argyle, Marshall Co., was notified by letter, not to fire up his engine until they, the boiler inspectors, ran up to test it. As there was nothing the matter with the boiler, the doctor told his foreman to fire up and go ahead, and is now grinding feed for himself and the country at large. The letter was the work of some sneak, and the only remedy for such imposition is a thorough organization of threshing machine owners. At the meeting last Saturday of those interested in threshing machines, it was shown that outsiders had been at work to prevent the meeting, nevertheless the meeting was a fair success. Mr. Merrill, of Fisher, was elected President of the organization. We understand that the threshing machine men of Argyle will organize and unite with us.

J. WALLACE.

THE DULUTH & WINNIPEG.

Duluth Herald.

Some impatience has been manifested in different quarters because the managers of the Duluth & Winnipeg road are apparently taking no action and seem not to be in a hurry to begin its construction. But a great deal of effective work can be done without making a fuss about it. The managers of the road are just as anxious to build, as the people of the Northwest are to have them do so, but they do not propose to repeat the original blunder, and begin before they are prepared. The preliminary work must all be done quietly, but after that is settled, it will be rushed along as fast as money and men can do it. The managers are arranging those details which do not appear in picks and shovels and steel rails, but all those things will come in time. The time cannot be delayed much longer, for three years will scarcely be more than enough to complete the road and earn the land grant. It is likely that within the next ten days, probably this week, the managers will be here with a definite proposition to submit to the people of St. Louis County for their consideration and upon the outcome of this will depend the immediate construction of the road. After all the preliminary matters are settled work will begin on the roadway, but whether it will begin at this point or at the western end, is not yet definitely settled. The Herald understands from good and reliable sources that ultimately a great transcontinental line is contemplated, extending from the Pacific, but this will require years for its completion and realization. The Northwest will be satisfied if it connects the Red River Valley directly with Duluth, and is willing that its extension be postponed. Our present need is a direct road to the Red River Valley, and this the managers of the Duluth & Winnipeg propose to give us. They will not begin until they are confident there will be no more breaks or stoppages. Once they start no Belheimer mismanagement will swamp them. It will start for keeps.

State Dairymen's Association.

Pioneer Press: The summer meeting of the State Dairymen's Association, to be held at Moorhead June 24-26, promises to be one of the most successful ever held. The secretary receives advices from Moorhead to the effect that the citizens of that place are making preparations for the occasion, which are simply "colossal." Arrangements are being made for special trains over the Northern Pacific, Manitoba and Fargo Southern railroads. Opportunities will be given for attendants to visit the Holstein farm of the Northwestern Breeders' Association, and the famous Shorthorn farm at Benson. Among those who will be present to deliver addresses will be Gov. Hubbard, Secretary Curtis, of the New York Dairymen's association, and the presidents and secretaries of similar bodies in various other States of the Union.

GUERNSEY CATTLE.

A VETERAN BREEDER'S EXPERIENCE.

L. F. Allen in Country Gentleman.

The Jerseys are well known, the Guernseys less well known in this country. They are a larger race than the Jerseys, less delicate in form, having better beef points, but excellent milkers, and very rich in all their characteristics. These have unctuous heads of rich color, giving very rich milk, the butter of which is deeply colored, and on an average yield, probably, in proportion to their weight, as much milk and butter as the Jerseys. Their calves are larger, they come quickly to maturity, but usually are not bred as early as the Jerseys; hence, a larger size is encouraged, and usually attained. The milk and butter of the Guernsey cows retains its color, which is of a very brilliant yellow, long into the winter, often from grass to grass; while that of the Jerseys frequently or usually loses its color and becomes as pale as that of our native stock within a month or six weeks after they cease to have grass or corn feed. The Guernsey, therefore, is regarded as pre-eminently a cow for the farmer and dairyman, on account of his excellent size—often reaching 1,200 pounds, and sometimes going as high as 2,000 lbs., in the case of the bulls and oxen—the good size of the calves, and her remarkably rich milk and abundant yield.

I, for myself, have a choice in the Channel Island cows, based partly on information from the island where they long have been bred, and partly from many years' experience, both in England and the United States, of those who have bred and used them for dairy purposes. These are the Guernseys. My own experiece with them has been short, and that only in young grade heifers. Four years ago I bought a promising bull, one year old, imported inside of his dam (begotten in Guernsey) who made 16 lbs. of butter per week in her best season, although I am ignorant of what she was fed on to produce it. Bred to good grade Short-horn cows, this bull produced for me about a dozen fine heifer calves, although much to my disappointment there were more bull calves from these cows than heifers, all of which went to the butcher at veal prices. The bull turned out badly after two years' service, beginning his use at eighteen months old. He then grew both cross in temper and lazy in service; so much so in the latter as to be worthless, although my herdsman could have managed his temper if he had proved a successful sire. As a result he was fed off and slaughtered at three and a half years old. Liking the young heifers and still in hope of further success, I purchased another young thoroughbred Guernsey bull, well descended from an imported cow, and have since used him in my herd to the same class of grade Short-horn cows, with equally good results in his heifer calves, of which I now have nearly twenty in number, thrifty and promising in growth.

Now, my reason for breeding these Guernsey bulls to high-grade Short-horns rather than to common cows, of which I have a few very good ones in my dairy herd, is that I wished the dams of my grade Guernseys to be good looking beasts; and as these dams were sired by a thoroughbred Short-horn bull of good milking stock I considered them a surer basis for producing good milkers than from common cows, however good they might individually be from the miscellaneous parentage through which they were descended, besides being more comely in form and appearance.

The heifers descended from the first bull have severally come into use, and proved, without exception, excellent milk and butter producers, coming in at about two years old, and increasing to ages of four or five years, will prove first-class cows. A word as to their flesh in the beef line. With no extra food in either pasture or winter keeping, a butcher looking over my herd in the pasture a few days ago offered my herdsman $50 each for a couple of half-bred Guernsey pregnant heifers for slaughter. Of course he was refused, as a hundred dollars each would not buy them. They are perfect beauties, inheriting the Short-horn shape, with the predominating dairy marks of the Guernsey. This is, of course, a short experience, but so confident am I in its success that if life and health be spared I shall rear a herd of cows in heir progressive grades of Guernsey blood to satisfy all my ambition in the dairy line. These young Guernsey grade cows are every one promising milkers, giving this summer, on grass pasture alone, equal yields of milk in the average, with a much larger percentage of cream upon it than upon the milk of either of their dams or the common cows, although both of the butter classes are good ones, thus showing fully the superior value of the Guernsey blood for butter and cheese. They may not be so productive as cows of other larger breeds in quantity of milk. I speak of them only for butter making, as that is the use I want them for. My heifers, those having their second calves, in several cases have been difficult to dry off. I wish to give them full five or six weeks rest from milking before the next progeny appears. Common cows frequently go dry for two or three months of their own volition, before a successive calf is born.—Breeder's Gazette.

"WHY HE PREFERS GUERNSEYS."

Our correspondent, Mr. I. J. Clapp, of Kenosha, Wis., sends us the following copy of a paper read at a late meeting of the Guernsey Cattle Club, of Chester Co., Pa., by Mr. R. H. Hodgson:

"In answering the question, why I keep Guernseys, I would say that my conclusions are the result of investigation and experiment. I always had a fondness for a good cow, and when a boy with my father I commenced to breed the Durham, and when I started the dairy I stocked up with grades of that family. They were of course large and good milkers for a short season, but were not rich; would go dry one-third of the time. I next bought a few Jersey heifers and a Jersey bull. The heifers were rich, but had small teats and were by no means favorites with the milkmen. They were small in size, delicate in constitution, and not able to care for themselves in the herd; and our grade Jersey bull calves were laughed at by the butchers, and branded as 'tooth-picks' and 'red-lights.' On account of the loss on the veal calves, their objectionably small teats, and their inability to care for themselves, I sold my Jerseys and stocked up again with grade Durhams. But, seeing some Guernsey cows, I was impressed with their general appearance and adaptation for dairy purposes, and I purchased the first I saw offered, and the investment proved very satisfactory. I have always used the best bulls I could get, and have brought up a herd of over thirty head of model dairy cows. They are large and strong, good feeders, carry a good proportion of flesh, are finely developed, with large udders and well-spread, good teats; are deep, rich milkers and milk up well to their calving (frequently have difficulty to get them dry), and the full-blood bull calves fed for veal are fully up to the common average, and the grade calves from common cows are not objected to by the butchers. A neighbor of mine a few winters since took two calves (half bloods) to Penn Station, that weighed over 200 pounds at six weeks old, and they were pronounced by the agent the best two calves that had been received there that winter, and another neighbor of mine told me the other day that he had just sold a calf of Roderick, five weeks old, that weighed over 200 lbs. I doubt, gentlemen, if any of you ever saw a lot of calves of the same age (that were not Durhams) that would excel in size those shown us by friends Kent and Hughes. I have crossed largely by using the Guernsey bull on the native and grade Durham cow, and find the grades a marked improvement on their dams in richness and time of milking. The Guernsey bull has a strong prepotency or tendency to reproduce himself or his ancestors, and a very fine type of the Guernsey is produced on the grade. Hence I do not hesitate to say there are more desirable points in the Guernsey cow and her grades adapted to the wants of the American farmer and dairymen than can be found in any other breed. The Guernsey cow will equal the Jersey in richness and in time of milking, and will excel her in size and constitution. She is as strong and vigorous as the ordinary cow and is able to care for herself in the common herd; will compete with the Durham in beef, as her oxen have weighed over 2,000 pounds, and her heifers under four years old have made from 700 to 900 pounds of dressed meat, and durin gthe year will give as much milk, make more butter and consume less provender than the Durham. My neighbors have used my bulls and I have never been able to buy the calves at anything like an ordinary price, and a high-grade cow will bring at public auction from 30 to 50 per cent. premium."

Mr. T. D. Curtis, of Syracuse, said that in a drove of Holsteins the best milkers were the ones which had the most white on their bodies. The whites were the milkers and the blacks had the good constitution.

Peas are a cheaper food for pigs than corn. They fatten them very rapidly, although they do not make as solid pork as corn. They have this advantage over corn: They mature early and can be fed as soon as large enough for green peas, the pigs consuming vines and all.

WHEAT GRADES.

The following grades were established by the State Board, under the act to regulate warehouses, inspection weighing and handling of grain, passed at the late session; viz:

"Number 1 hard spring wheat must be sound, bright and clean, must contain not less than seventy-five per cent of hard Scotch Fife, and weigh not less than fifty-eight pounds to the measured bushel.

Number 1 northern spring wheat must be sound and well cleaned and must contain not less than fifty per cent of of the hard varieties of spring wheat. It is to be understood that the minimum test weight of this grade shall not be less than fifty-seven pounds to the measured bushel.

Number 2 northern spring wheat must be sound, reasonably clean and of good milling quality. This grade to include all wheat not suitable for the higher grades and to weigh not less than fifty-six pounds to the measured bushel.

Number 3 spring wheat shall comprise all inferior, shrunken or dirty spring wheat weighing not less than fifty-four pounds to the measured bushel.

Rejected spring wheat shall include all spring wheat that is grown, badly bleached or for any cause unfit for No. 3 wheat. Wheat containing any admixture of rice or goose wheat will in no case be graded higher than rejected.

All wheat that is in a heating condition, musty or too damp to be safe for warehousing, or has any considerable admixture of foreign grain or seeds, or is badly "bin burnt" whatever grade it might otherwise be, shall be pronounced "No Grade," with inspector's notations as to quality and conditions."

In the character of the appointments made and in the results so far accomplished by the Board we can not see any very great cause for rejoicing on the part of the farmers over the results accomplished last session but we may be mistaken and the only way to definitely ascertain that point is to give the law a fair and impartial trial. We trust that the results will be to us a pleasant disappointment.

The Holsteins and Jerseys.

From the Pioneer Press.

The Holstein and Jersey breeds are monuments of the skill of the originators and breeders, not only because the breeders have been enabled to hand down to posterity improved stock superior to that which is native and well known, but because the two breeds have been adapted to special and distinct purposes. The Holsteins, though unknown in this country a few years ago, have displaced the Ayrshires, which formerly stood at the head of milk-producing families. The Holstein possesses many advantages over the Ayrshires, among which are large size, uniformity of color and richness of milk. Although credited with the largest milk records, the Holsteins have rivaled the Jerseys as butter-makers, and at one time a Holstein cow—Mercedes—held the position of champion butter cow in the world. Nor is she an exception, for while the present records of the Jerseys for days and weeks are wonderful, yet the Holsteins have rivaled them when the tests were made for long periods. As beef cattle they are not inferior, and as oxen they equal the Devons. Their great merit is in their ability to give large quantities of milk, in which they excel all other breeds, but they combine so many desirable qualities that they may be regarded as a high rank of "general purpose" cattle, which heretofore has been beyond the reach of any class of stock.

The Jerseys have been greatly improved within the past ten years by a strict system of breeding close to the best butter producing families. The recent feat of Princess 2d, in which she made a record of over forty-six pounds of butter in one week, has placed the ability of the Jerseys beyond any doubt, and as her record is being followed closely by other cows of that breed, we cannot as yet fix any limit which they should not pass. While the Jerseys are admitted to be the best butter producers, yet they do not yield milk largely, which is not favorable to them, as the milk of itself possesses a value in addition to the butter produced from it. A cow that produces twelve quarts of milk, which gives one pound of butter, does better than one that yields six quarts of milk, from which a pound of butter is derived, though the common practice is to reverse these conditions, and give the preference to the cow that produces the largest amount of butter from the smallest quantity of milk. If the Jerseys were heavy milkers such rule would be in their favor, but as they must compete with the great yields of the Holsteins, from which large quantities of butter are made, it is a disputed question whether the future is more promising to the Holsteins or to the Jerseys as butter-producers.

The excellent qualities possessed by both breeds, however, show what may be done by careful selection of the best animals, adhering closely to certain strains that excel in the most desirable characteristics. The originators of the many breeds of improved stock have conferred great benefits on humanity. They have divided and classified our domestic stock into families, or breeds, for certain purposes, and each breed is given its own talent, which it may improve. The Holsteins and Jerseys for milk and butter, the Shorthorns and Herefords for beef, the Merinoes for fine wool, the numerous Downs for mutton, the Berkshires for hams, the thoroughbred horse for speed, the Clydesdales and Percherons for heavy draft, and the various breeds of poultry received their inherent excellence through the agency of the breeders, whose skill and judgment have added millions to the wealth of the civilized world. The value of the milk and butter alone annually produced in this country exceeds that of the capital of the national banks, and is greater than the value of the crops of wheat, or the products of the iron interests; and yet dairying is only in its infancy.

Feeding the Pigs.

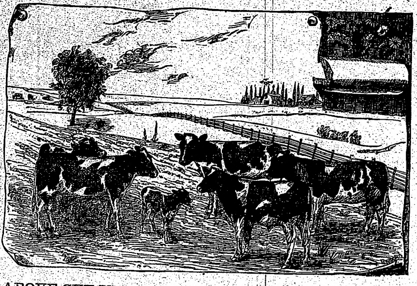
The National Live Stock Journal says: The method of feeding the young pigs in summer depends somewhat on how they are to be disposed of—whether to be fattened for the coming winter, or to be wintered over. In the latter case, and, where the pigs have been late arrivals, this is the best plan: No forcing is necessary, and when they have had their mother's care for ten or twelve weeks, give them good pasture, plenty of grass and clover, and see that they have an abundant supply of pure water. Under such conditions, if they come from a healthy mother, they will probably begin the winter vigorous and hearty. And yet, even with these, moderate rations of grain, skim milk, and any other wholesome food that can be the most inexpensively provided, will help their growth amazingly, and bring them into the winter in capital trim. It has been urged that nothing was necessary in summer for pigs that were to be wintered over but grass. With this view, we are not disposed to agree, except in so far as regards the young sows that are to be kept for breeding purposes, and which, therefore, it is not desirable to fatten; all that is required of them is good healthy growth. But the summer time is the cheapest time to make growth. For this reason many large hog raisers prefer the early pigs that can be turned out as soon as weaned, and crowded steadily up to six or eight months, thus making their growth when they can do so at the least expense and with the least trouble to the owner. In this case no difference of opinion exists as to the method of care and feeding. It is simply to provide, with healthful conditions and give them all the wholesome, nourishing feed they will eat.

Wheat will Advance.

Elmira Husbandman: It seems to be accepted now as a fact that the wheat crop of this country will be much less than in any other year since 1879, yet the price continues low. Speculators complain bitterly at the disposition manifested by farmers to hold their wheat until the price advances. What else can a farmer do if he has just consideration for his own interests? It is true, he may be compelled to sell because of debts but if he is able to hold when the price is below cost of production, that is the wise course. A farmer in one of the best wheat counties of this State remarked a few years ago when he had two or three crops of wheat on hand that the price would be a dollar and a half at least once in three years, and he made it his practice to hold his crops for that price. His generalizing, however, was sound, and will be supported in years to come by prices that will always go higher after a long period of depression. The very fact that wheat has sold low continuously for three years and more is an argument favoring an advance, because low prices have lessened the area of production, while, at the same time, they have increased consumption, thus bringing nearer approach to that even ballance between supply and demand which makes healthful trade. Careful observers of the situation have now settled to the conclusion that wheat will advance within the present year. It may not go to high figures, it probably will not, nevertheless an advance is almost as sure as the harvest.

Profits of Dairying.

Farmers' Tribune: Professor L. B. Arnold says a dairy farm costs 10 per cent less to operate than grain growing or mixed agriculture; second, the mean returns average a little more than other branches; third, prices are nearer uniform and more reliable; fourth, dairying exhausts the soil less; fifth, it is more secure against changes in the season, since dairying does not suffer so much from the wet and frosts and varying seasons, and he can if prudent provide against drought.



THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, wil' be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

ROUND' HOME.

Headquarters for California fruit at Herb's.

G. L. Grey has bought a fine phaeton costing $225.

Herb is ragging out in great shape for the ever glorious.

Mrs. I. M. Underhill arrived on Wednesday evening of last week.

Henry Berthiaume has gone east on a fortnight's visit.

Major Mix informs us that the company will sell tickets for the 4th at half-price, good until the 6th.

Cool, refreshing summer drinks, the kind which cheer but do not inebriate constantly on tap a Herb's.

Those blankets which Herb Mason put on the street sprinkler's team are beauties. They advertise Herb's place in good shape.

Herb's place is headquarters for fireworks. Go and see the tons and tons he has on tap.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Walsh have gone to Canada visiting, E. M. intends to take in the grand re-union at Portland, Me., ere his return.

Flags till you can't rest at Herb's. Millions and millions of 'em of every size and description.

Chris Steenerson was in from Beltrami Co., last week. He will represent his tribe (the Chippewas) in the dairymen's convention at Moorhead this week.

Herb has just received an invoice of the famous Studio cigar. Try 'em.

Mr. D. Buchanan was summoned to Toronto by telegram last week, announcing the death of an uncle and the illness of his father. He left on Friday evening and will be gone a fortnight.

Herb is bound not to be out-done. He is fully prepared to furnish you everything you need for a first-class celebration on the ever glorious.

D. Jacobus received a telegram from Wm. Ross on Monday, stating that Mr. Ross and Mrs. Jacobus reached Queenstown on Saturday night at 12:30. They were a week crossing the ocean.

Fireworks for the millions at Herbs at bedrock prices. "Do you tumble?" Do you catch on?"

G. H. Palmer's little boy, three years old, is suffering from a swollen hand. He cut it on a colored cord and it has swollen fearfully extending up the forearm to the elbow. The doctors are puzzled.

Soda water of the very best at Herb's. It is built of artesian water which is the purest in the business. Try it and take no other.

J. E. Vanatta arrived with his family on Monday and hereafter he may be found at Berthiaume Bro's. Palace jewelry store. He is an experienced workman and knows how to attend to your wants as it should be done.

Berthiaume Bro's. have just received a case of castors, cut glass goods. These castors are generally sold for $6 but as they bought by the case they can and sell them at $3.75 each.

W. F. Zwickey returned on Monday with Gunder A. Berland who is wanted on a criminal charge. He had to go down into Filmore Co., after his man but got him. He reports the crops down there very much injured by wet, very weedy and corn looking decidedly sick. He says the crops in the Red River Valley will beat anything he saw all hollow.

Guns, did you say? Well try Berthiaume Bro's. They have a carload or so of every description from the cheapest to the most expensive and shells enough to furnish fifty rounds apiece or so. And as to revolvers they have no end of 'em. If its firearms you want go and see what the boys can do for you.

Andrew Eiken went on a visit to Clay Co., last week. He reports crops there and in Cass Co., D. T., suffering from too much rain. The prairies are very wet, some pieces of wheat nearly drowned out and farmers apprehensive of much damage. So far we have not had too much but do not really need more right away.

Supt. W. H. Fisher has been elected President of the St. Paul & Duluth road and George Copeland is promoted to the position of Assistant Supt. Both are well known here having been formerly connected with this road. Mr. Fisher has a large farm in the northern part of Norman Co., and Mr. Copeland is part owner of the townsite of St. Hilaire.

Last week Mr. James Burt, in Fairfax, in fencing a field ran the fence across a road that had been used as a highway for some time. The town authorities summoned him before Judge Palmer to try conclusions in the matter but failed to prove their point, which was that the road had been in use for six years and hence a legal highway. It seems that at the point in dispute the regularly laid out road runs through a slough therefore it has been customary to take a circle out upon Mr. Burt's land. The town authorities claim that they have tried to purchase right of way, as the slough is impassable and it is impracticable to make a road through it, but that it cannot be done at a reasonable figure. We are told that condemnation proceedings will be instituted. This case will be a test case in the many similar ones that exist in the county.

Peanut day July 7th.

No. 1 Hard wheat remains at 76.

Confectionery and fruits of the freshest and best at Herb's.

Wallack's on Saturday evening, June 27th. Secure your tickets early.

Look out for the big circus on July 7th. A good time for old and young.

The Weldon circus advertising car was in on Wednesday. It is a fine affair. Look out for the big time July 7th.

Many are disappointed at not being able to go to Moorhead to attend the Dairymen's Association meeting there in session.

Try Herb for fireworks of every kind. He sells 'em this year for fun.

The Grand Army re-union at Portland is a big success. It is estimated that 80,000 old soldiers joined in the parade on Tuesday.

Mr. Ira B. Kidder arrived on Friday last for a week's sojourn looking after his interests here. He talks of putting some shorthorns on his farm and engaging in stock-raising.

R. W. Weldon & Co's. circus and menagerie is coming on Tuesday, July 7th. It is said to be one of the biggest shows that travels including in its list some animals never before exhibited in this country.

A fine stock of goods on hand, suitable for presents etc., at bottom prices.

C. H. SAAKE, The Jewelry.

That artesian lemonade at Herb's still attracts popular attention. It is as slick as oil.

A packing-house is talked and the prospects are that it will become an accomplished fact. An institution of this kind as greatly needed and would be a good thing not only for the farmer but for its proprietors as well.

In the case of Horton vs. Weidenhoeffer, for theft, Esq. Palmer found for plaintiff. The article alleged to have been stolen was a $15 fur overcoat. The costs and all amount to $50. The case is appealed.

A carload of Jim Hill's "little black bulls" went through on Monday. They are a portion of the 108 which recently arrived from the old country. Mr. Hill is doing a good work for this country in this matter.

Does your watch stop? Take it to C. H. Saake and be sure to get it right and reasonable. C. H. Saake has the advantage of low expenses and will make thus a benefit to his customers.

The great Wallack Theatre Company, of New York, will be at the Opera House in Crookston, on Saturday evening, June 27th, 1885. Box office now open. In securing this company Mr. Filiatrault shows a spirit of enterprise that deserves ample recognition.

Mr. Pierce also received three choice thoroughbred pigs on Tuesday, that Mr. Kidder purchased for him in Wisconsin. They are but a few weeks old but are the finest we have ever seen in the county. Mr. Pierce is bound to establish a No. 1 stock farm if he don't lay up a cent and his efforts deserve ample recognition by all interested in good stock.

Mr. J. Kidder arrived on Monday with H. M. Pierce's thoroughbred Guernseys and Poland China pigs. He also brought for himself three grade Clydesdale three-year-olds in colt to Blairnaim, No. 1492, one of the best imported thoroughbred Clydesdale horses ever brought to Wisconsin. Two of these colts were raised by imported Robert-Bruce, a noted Clydesdale. They are all fine animals.

E. D. Childs' thoroughbred Holstein-Friesian heifer, "Olga," went through the city on Tuesday, creating a great deal of interest. Hundreds were anxious to see the fine animal, whose high-breeding was easily discernable and many were the favorable expressions we heard. Mr. Childs says the Holsteins are the coming cattle for the Northwest and he has backed up his judgment by purchasing one of the finest of these animals.

Last week Thursday Terryll & Miller commenced to paint the town black with Terryll's Liquid Slating. Their first attempt was made upon the roof of the JOURNAL office which soon assumed a beautiful slate color. For some time we had been troubled with a leaky roof which became so unbearable that we had decided to re-shingle, when Mr. Terryll fortunately came along and said that his liquid slating would save us that trouble and expense. The slating was put on Thursday morning and in the afternoon a severe rainstorm tested its merits. We have had two big rain storms since the work was done and our roof does not leak a bit. Messrs. Terryll & Miller have slated roofs for Mossifin's Hotel and barn, Fontaine & Anglim's stores, the Clement's building (in same block) and Wentzel's saloon building, and are now at work on Dobson's buildings. They find themselves rushed with work and we believe all who try the slating will be well pleased with results. This slating is of such a nature as to penetrate the shingles and render them absolutely fireproof and more durable than before. It has been on buildings in Faribault for 14 years, the roof being seemingly as perfect to-day as the day the slating was put on. Compared with its value it is by far the cheapest roof paint in existence. From our present experience we can recommend it heartily.

I am very glad to be able to announce that my trade is steadily increasing and growing every day, and I here wish to extend my hearty thanks to the citizens of Crookston and vicinity for their large and liberal patronage in the past and hope that by a strict and close application to business to merit a continuance of the same.

Very respectfully,
C. H. SAAKE,
Practical watchmaker, jeweler and optician.

St. John's Day in Crookston.

The day was ushered in auspiciously howbeit the clouds hung like a sable mantle during the greater part of the day, threatening to distil showers to dampen the ardor. The bands, G. A. R. post, and fire department went down to the depot at 10 a. m., to receive all who might come and immediately thereafter the procession formed on Broadway at the opera house. First came the marshals of the day followed by St. John's car which was beautifully trimmed, in which were three little children and a little lamb; next came the St. John's society of 125 members with a large silk banner, followed by the two Crookston cornet bands, 13 pieces led by L. Mignault in a stunning uniform; next came the G. A. R. post of 60 members; then a diminutive mule, drawing a Red River cart, upon which was a representation of Herb's Branch as it was in 1881 when Herb started in business on a capital of $12; this was followed by a four-horse wagon upon which was a representation of Herb's Branch as it is to-day; this wagon was literally loaded down with fruits of all kinds, nuts, confectionery and cigars the steam peanut roaster and Herb's orchestra playing a variety of music, and Herb himself throwing out packages of his wares to the crowd of urchins which followed in droves. Herb made a grand display. Next came a large wagon upon which Bray & O'Brien had rigged up a complete tin shop with workmen busy turning out the tinware by wholesale. This was a fine display and the boys gave away much tin. Next came a carpenter shop on wheels in which the carpenters were seen busy at their trade. This was followed by a wagon on which were to be seen mason's at work at their trade, plastering and laying brick. Then came a representation of Munn Bro's. blacksmith shop with the workmen pounding iron for keeps; followed by a wagon upon which were seen men hard at work threshing out wheat with flails and winnowing it as in ye olden times. Then came a skiff on wheels in which were seated three old pioneers of 1827, with their guns and dog, skulling their boat along and singing the songs of ye olden time. Next came the Fisher band, dressed in splendid uniform, consisting of 12 pieces; The Crookston fire company, 30 members; followed by the butcher shop of Le Duc & Co.; A bus, gaily decorated, loaded with travelers, represented the Carman House. Mr. Z. Davoust, the proprietor started in business a few years since, a poor man and now has the largest hotel in Carman and has built up a large trade which he amply deserves; a shoemaker shop with the workmen all busy, and a boot-black in one corner finished up this display; then came citizens in carriages. Our reporter counted over one hundred vehicles of every description and did not get them all. The procession marched torough the principal streets and thence up to Barret's grove where the day was happily spent in the usual manner. Taken as a whole the affair was a grand success and heartily enjoyed by all.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to call the attention of your readers to what pluck, energy and invincible determination can accomplish in business. The exclusive feature among your merchants in the grand procession of St. John's Day, on Wednesday, was the novel and attractive display of Herb's Branch store. The beautiful purple, silver-fringed banners borne by the foremost team of his carriage, with the inscriptions in silver letters—"Herb's Branch, Sole Agency for Studio 53 Cigars" and "Artesian Lemonade at Herb's Branch," the tempting display of tropical fruits, the steam peanut roaster and musical attachment, playing sweet melodies, together with the free distribution of fresh roasted peanuts, created much merriment among the juveniles and enjoyed by all.

The novelty of H. A. Mason's display led me to inquire into the reasons of his remarkable success in his business. In 1881 he began with a capital of $12. His store, corner of Robert and Main streets, is cram full of every variety of tropical fruits, cigars, candies and novelties of every description, and by far the busiest, cheapest and the most popular and attractive place in your beautiful city and a credit, not only to the owner, but your town and the Red River Valley. The lessons are

1st. Mr. H. A. Mason is full of pluck, courtesy and personal magnetism, and everybody likes to deal with him.

2d. He buys of the largest and best houses in the East.

3d. He pays cash and saves a large percentage.

4th. He sells for cash and never makes a bad debt.

5th. He keeps no idle clerks to consume his profits.

His place of business is crowded from morning till late in the evening, as all are convinced that they can always get the best goods and more for their money than anywhere else. I predict for H. A. Mason a successful business career. Any man of his grit, energy, courtesy and enthusiasm is sure to rise to the top, in any vocation in life.

A TEMPORARY SOJOURNER.

BELRAMI ITEMS.

Come on boys!

Get ready for the Fourth!

The farmers' commence to cry "too much rain!"

A. W. Mott went down to Wisconsin on a business tour last week. He intended to stay about a week and take in Minneapolis and St. Paul on his way back.

But hush, hark, that heavy sound breaks in once more,
And we are clearer, deadlier than before,
It is, it is, the boys pounding at the Depot door."

Lewis Seger was out fishing last Friday night and caught fourteen large fish. When he goes out again we wish he would take along some of his friends with whom he could divide the fun and the fish, provided he would keep the mosquito bites undivided to himself.

Young man, if you want to be respected, just respect yourself. Others may fail to do it.

It is reported that Ole P. Onstad, of the town of Onstad, has been allotted one of Hill's thoroughbred bulls.

If you should inadvertantly turn a capital joke upon yourself, do not get too choleric, but have the manliness to bear it, and calmly face the results.

Rev. P. Stromme visited Beltrami last Tuesday.

A man from Aldal reported that Mr. Nels A. Bolstad was seriously hurt by a runaway last Sunday and that his five or six months old child had been killed. The man said: "Mr. Balstad had been to church and stopped in front of K. Nelson's house where some of the party wanted to get off. Mr. Balstad jumped out of the wagon and left the lines hanging over the seat. The horses got scared and started to run. Mr. Balstad seized the lines and succeeded in getting into the wagon again but the front end board of the wagon box fell out, and Mr. Bolstad in his struggle to stop the horses was thrown out of the wagon in front and got pretty seriously hurt. The team ran up against the corner of a barn and his child, about five or six months old, was thrown from the wagon and dashed against a log causing almost instant death. His wife and two girls, who were also in the wagon, fortunately escaped any material hurt."

Sunday was a day of gathering.

ANDIVE.

Berthiaume Bro's. mammoth jewelry store is filled to overflowing with every article in their line. Their musical goods can not be beat in style, quality or quantity.

GUERNSEY'S FOR POLK COUNTY.

For some time it has been rumored that H. M. Pierce was down with the Guernsey fever, but all the pumping our reporter could do elicited nothing satisfactory, until on Monday last Mr. J. Kidder arrived with a pair of two year old Guernsey beauties for Mr. Pierce. We shouldered our little pencil at once and put for Pierce's barn where, sure enough, we found them pretty tired from their long trip, but as trim and pretty as pictures. They are PRINCE SECOND—sire Prince 1st, descended from old St. Andrew 1st, one of the most noted Guernseys in existence. The dam of Prince 2d was imported Coralinie, No. 1,790, American Guernsey Cattle Club Herd Book. He was born July 16th, 1883, and is therefore a trifle under two years old. As an individual he is one of the finest of the Channel Island breeds that ever came into the county. LEILA, No. 1,425, A. G. C. C. H. B. is a beautiful spotted heifer, sired by imp. Sir Champlin No. 88, A. G. C. C. H. B., and a granddaughter of Polly of Kenosha, one of the best Guernsey cows ever brought to Wisconsin. She is a regular spotted beauty and will one day show a butter record that will open the eyes of all who see no merit in blood or we miss our guess. H. M. does not say what these beauties cost him, but a price list from Mr. Clapp, (of whom they were purchased) shows us that he did not get them for a song. These animals went up to Mr. Pierce's stock farm, the nw¼ of Sec. 4, Crookston township, on Tuesday afternoon, where they may now be seen. Mr. Pierce deserves great credit for his efforts to improve the stock of Polk County and he should be liberally patronized.

The American Agriculturist for July 1885, contains over one hundred different articles by leading writers, and over seventy illustrations by well known artists. Among the most interesting and important papers are those which treat of the insects just now injuring the crops all over the country. These are illustrated, and furnish the latest scientific investigations as to the habits and extermination of these insect pests. D. D. T. Moore writes upon Small vs. Large Farms. Henry Stewart discourses on Southern Farm Life and Agricultural Interests. Andrew S. Fuller describes a new and most important method for the application of Wood Preservatives. Joseph Harris "Walks and Talks on the Farm." L. C. Root and W. Z. Hutchinson write The Apiary. D. W. King describes the designs for a Queen Ann cottage. Wm. Clift tells about the Peach Borer, and the remedy. M. C. Weld descants upon Famous Families of Cattle. Dr. George Thurber contributes a variety of interesting Horticultural papers. Dr. Edwin J. Howe discusses the Importance of Pure Drinking Water. Elias Thayer describes a new Hay Gatherer. F. H. Hannah furnishes designs for convenient Pig Pen. Numerous other writers are represented. There are two beautiful full-page pictures appropriate to the season. Price, $1.50 a year. Single number 15 cts. Address Publishers American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

The Boiler Inspection Law in the Red River Valley.

CROOKSTON, June 22, 1885.

EDITOR JOURNAL: A meeting of those interested in steam threshing machines was held in Crookston on Saturday, June 13th. The amendment to the boiler inspection law, which has produced such a bad feeling here, was thoroughly discussed, and the opinion freely expressed that it was the worst piece of legislation ever lobbied through the Legislature. Had it been only a question of taking a few dollars out of our pockets, it might have passed unnoticed, but the mongrels who lobbied the law through had a water test put on, so severe that if the thresher boilers do not give way under the strain, it will leave them dangerous to be run afterwards." The above was sent to the Minneapolis Evening Journal with the intention of bringing it before the mechanics of that city, which is the manufacturing center of the Northwest, and boasts of having as good workmen as any city in the country. It was, therefore, the proper place to open the discussion of this cold water inspection fraud, but the Journal did not see fit to notice it. Had it been a horse race, or saloon fight it might have secured considerable space, but the blowing up of a lot of farmers and threshing machine men is of no importance to that paper. I will now give you a few ideas concerning these cold water inspectors, and I will say right here that they are a beautiful set, and the substitution of cold water for a practical knowledge of boiler making was a brilliant idea to get a fat job. I would rather be guilty of highway robbery than be guilty of that inspection law. I will now come to the practical question that has been so often asked: "How would you test a steam boiler?" I will answer, as I have before, there is no way of testing a boiler except by putting in the necessary quantity of water, then fire it up till you burst or explode it. This has been done repeatedly; but, you ask, "how would you inspect a boiler to know that it was all right?" That you see is another question altogether. To test and to inspect are two entirely different operations. Well, an experienced boiler maker can look your boiler over and tell you precisely the condition it is in, and he don't want any cold water to do it either. Boiler making is a mechanical trade like any other and is obtained only by years of experience. Remember, that experience teaches knowledge and practice makes perfect, and that is what makes the boiler maker argue that boilers were not made for cold water, but for hot water, steam and fire, which are as different in action as chalk is from cheese. Had a threshing machine engine boiler that carries 110 lbs. of steam been subject to about 75 lbs. water pressure, perhaps no objection would have been raised, but this extreme of over 165 lbs. is calculated to strain the boiler and leaves it dangerous afterwards with a hundred pounds of steam. It is a well known law in mechanics that anything once strained is unreliable for strength afterwards. There are many people who seem to think that an engineer is a suitable person to examine a steam boiler because he runs the engine. Well, would a man that runs a bakery wagon be the most suitable person to give instruction in a baker's shop? Oh, no! every man to his trade, is the old saying, and a correct and safe one. I will give another short chapter on this infamous law at another time. As the Evening Journal refuses to notice this it is not likely the other journals will, especially as the Pioneer Press advocated the passage of the inspection fraud.

Equally prominent in the Arenic Firmament will appear the Troupe of Royal Japanese and the Wonderful Spanish Female Fire Jugglers and Necromancers,

The huge, block "Desert Ship," towering like a temple and dwarfing into ridcule the tallest elephants ever seen. Speaking of giants, there are the TALL AND STATELY EMUES, the very largest of their lofty, featheren kind, and the GIANT ANT BEAR, looking down upon its Abyssinian colleagues from its growing altitude. Then think of an Elevated Stage, upon which Bycycle Experts and Russian Roller Skaters divulge fantastic sciences. There never was the like before. There are a thousand strange sights to be seen in the Menagerie that are totally unlike those usually seen in animal collections. It would be human folly, in this limit of space, to attempt the merest outline of the hundreds of novel and sensational attractions that constitute the claim of excellence for OUR SUPREMELY GREATEST SHOWS. Farmers' Meeting.

To the Wheat growers and business men of Northern Minnesota and Northern Dakota:

It is hereby announced that a meeting is called at the city of Moorhead on the 7th and 8th days of July next, at the Bruns opera house, at which time and place the State Board of railroad and warehouse commissioners of Minnesota will be present; also the chief grain inspector of the State and as many of the chief deputy inspectors as can conveniently come will be present. Several questions of the greatest importance to the wheat growers and business men of Northern Minnesota and Northern Dakota will be considered, among which will be considered freight rates and wheat grades and untrammeled markets. We would suggest that farmers and delegates to this meeting, so far as convenient, bring samples of wheat grown in their respective sections. Will all editors of newspapers of these Northern wheat-growing sections, be so kind as to keep a permanent notice of the meeting in their respective papers until after the event. Also will said editors please consider themselves self-appointed delegates to this meeting.

By order of farmers' committee.

A. M. Burdick, Chairman.

Moorhead, June 5, 1885.

FERTILE ITEMS.

Fertile, June 16th, 1885.

Splendid growing weather.

Never saw finer prospects for crops since we came to this valley.

Very heavy growth of vegetation and unless the rain fills up the sloughs there will be an abundance of hay.

In riding through the county, we notice nearly everyone is fencing for pasturing. This is a great improvement, not only in looks, but adds to the property of the county by giving better facilities for raising stock, which we believe is the corner stone of our future financial prosperity.

Mr. J. F. Brown is turning out a good cheese every day. He thoroughly understands his business and will make a success.

Come and celebrate with us. We are going to have a good time. Speeches, music, lots of fun, good dancing room, Davey's string band and a fine display of fireworks to wind up with. Our hotel keeper will serve an excellent supper for the dance. Those who enjoy a fine drive, through a very beautiful country, on fine hard roads, and a good time generally, are invited to come.

Sand Hill River has never been as high as now since we have known it. The country between here and Beltrami was flooded and roads are in consequence very bad.

Nearly all of the wheat from this section is being hauled to Crookston. Farmers getting better prices, and grading at the mills. Our wheat, raised in the Sand Hill Valley, is superior for milling, but on account of large berry, and light color will not grade No. 1 hard at Beltrami so we must haul to Crookston or Ada.

Miss Mary Sanford, from Illinois is visiting her brother, Mr. Stauly Sanford.

La Due & Co., report a large sale of barbed wire and have sold more grass seed than ever before.

Considerable sod is being turned over. Farmers are intending to summer fallow old fields.

Messrs. Gilmour, Andrews and Englestad, were in Crookston attending court.

Mrs. E. E. Risland is very sick; we hope for her early recovery.

Messrs. X. Sohler, A. J. Hamery and J. J. La Due serve their country on the 4th of July as committee on amusement, from their well known "gay and festive" habits you may confidently look for immense fun.

Both mills are running full blast and in consequence our little berg is quite lively.

Main Street is being graded and leveled, adding much to the looks of our place.

The blacksmiths shops are getting plenty of work.

Yours, L.

Western Farming.

St. Paul Globe: An Eastern gentleman who is largely interested in agricultural pursuits in Dakota, was in the Northern Pacific office yesterday, making arrangements for the shipping of blooded stock to his farm in the West. In his conversation with the railroad official whom he was making arrangements with, he remarked that the Western land owners must pay more attention to stock raising on their farms. Heretofore and at present they are depending entirely upon the outcome of a season's crop, and if it fails, they have nothing to fall back upon. Farming in Dakota is only a matter of a few weeks in the spring and a few more in the fall, and the rest of the time the farmers are idle. They must devote more time to their occupations or the country will not be developed, and the towns and cities in the Northwest, which are largely dependent upon the result of the farming interests, will die. The gentleman gave his own experience which was that for the last few years he had only resorted to wheat growing for the maintenance of his property, and with the idea of obtaining a surplus capital. But he failed to make the farm realize what he anticipated. He is now going to build two barns, one 66x300 feet, and the stock in winter, which he intends putting on his farm. The farmers have not raised any stock in Eastern Dakota, and had to buy in the west, all for their own consumption.

Partial Soiling in Dairying.

National Live Stock Journal: The capital now invested in this great specialty is very large, and a small improvement in the production of its 12,000,000 cows would produce a great result. Every dairyman should provide for full feeding his herd through the entire season. The loss occasioned by scanty feeding after the first flush of grass is gone, is much greater than is supposed. It often happens that the flush yield of milk only continues four or five weeks, and the gradual falling off in the pasture causes the production of milk to fall off one-third—that is, the yield of the herd is reduced from 24 lbs. to 16 lbs. And this loss in never regained.

Every dairyman should be prepared to feed green grass in stable night and morning as soon as the pasture begins to fall off. A clover field will be ready to cut at the right time. Good sized cows will eat of green clover, just before blossom or in early blossom, twenty-five pounds at night and the same in the morning, and then, being turned to pasture by day they will get a full ration, and keep up the flow of milk. This clover can be cut rapidly by a mowing machine. In prospect of wet weather the clover can be put in bar for a few days. A mixture of clover and timothy, or other meadow grasses, can be used in the same way. This is much more economical of land than to increase the pasture, for one acre of good clover will be equal in feeding a dairy herd to four acres of pasture. The pasture will dry up and be rejected as soon as the grass becomes old. For feeding later in the season, oats and peas, or millet, may be raised. If the dairyman has no soiling crop to feed green, then his best way is to feed hay that has been run through a cutter, mixing in about two quarts of good middlings at a feed. Cows will eat this cut hay and middlings with a good appetite and keep up the flow of milk.

WHY I AM BREEDING GUERNSEYS.

About twenty-five years ago my father purchased his first Guernsey bull and raised all the good heifer calves sired by him, and this was a great majority of them, as he was a very fine, large bull, and appeared to be able to transmit his good qualities with almost unerring certainty to all his calves. When these heifers came in profit their milk was so much richer looking and higher colored than their dams as to at once attract my attention to it. These heifers were served by another Guernsey bull, and this practice continued until I became satisfied that the Guernsey cow was the dairyman's cow par excellence. In 1875 I commenced to breed Guernseys by purchasing a bull calf and three heifer calves; as my means were very limited I was compelled to begin with a few, and gradually increase my herd principally by raising my own stock.

This venture has proved very satisfactory, the only regret being that I have not more of them to-day. I was criticised quite freely by my neighbors for investing in what is called fancy stock, and it was not until I had obtained more money in cash prizes at the Pennsylvania State Fair in 1880 than my stock cost me that they were willing to admit that there was something in it. The heifers raised have uniformly proved to be good cows, a fact which will, I think, not suffer by comparison with any other breed. Their quiet disposition is a great point in their favor, as they waste no material that should go to the pail by any uneasiness or displays of temper. The butter made from Guernseys is of a very rich flavor, and sufficiently highly colored even in the winter season when on dry feed. It appears to be necessary at the present time of adulterated goods that the dairyman make nothing but a first-class article in every particular, and he can do this in no better way than by buying a thoroughbred Guernsey bull and grading up his stock, or investing, if his means will permit, in thoroughbreds at the start.

The Buckwheat Crop—Valuable.

Buckwheat can be made a profitable crop, if proper care is given to it. This grain is worth at least seventy-five cents a bushel for feeding, if it is properly fed. It is best ground with corn, as fine as possible, and may be fed with cut hay or straw moistened with water. The seed may be sown early in July. We have found thick seeding the best. At least one bushel per acre should be used. It pays to prepare the ground as well for this crop as for any other, but it is especially useful for the purpose of breaking up an old meadow, and preparing it for reseeding. The sod will be well rotted, and the soil mellowed and made ready for a fall grain crop, if this is desired, to be followed by the grass seed next summer. No other crop, except peas, so well mellows the ground as buckwheat, and this is precisely the effect required in reseeding land. Besides this useful purpose, buckwheat is valuable for grain. It will easily produce thirty or forty bushels per acre if well managed, and a bushel of it is worth two bushels of oats of the light sort usually grown, which is largely husk. The crop, too, is put in at times and harvested at times convenient for the farmer.—[American Agriculturist for July.

Millet or Hungarian Grass.

There are few farms where there is not more or less land that cannot be or is not occupied with the ordinary crops, such as corn, corn fodder, potatoes, oats, barley, wheat, pear or beans. It is too late to plow early enough in the season for these crops, or it may be that the land was planted to corn, or potatoes, or beans, and the frost destroyed them. After the first of July, the only crops that can be sown to advantage are winter wheat, or winter rye, for next year, and for a crop this year, turnips, and millit or Hungarian grall. There is not much difference between millet and Hungarian grass. Sow whichever is most convenient. Perhaps the Hungarian grass makes the better fodder. Any good land that can be brought into a fine, mellow condition, with moisture enough to germinate the seed, will produce millet or Hungarrian grass. On dry upland it is not always easy, during dry, hot weather, to secure the desired tilth. It requires a free use of the harrow and roller, first one then the other, to reduce the hard clods. A good roller is especially needed. You connot roll dry land too much. On moist, mucky, or alluvial soil, it is an easy matter at this season to put in a crop of millet or Hungarian grass. If the land is not too rough, or too heavily covered with grass or weeds, a gang-plow that, with three horses, will turn over four or five acres a day, five or six inches deep, is as good as an ordinary plow and much more expeditions. Then harrow until the ground is smooth and mellow, and sow from three pecks to one bushel of seed per acre, broadcast, and go over it with a light harrow and finish with a roller, and the work is done. The earlier the seed can be sown after the first of July, the better; but a fair crop can be grown if not sown until the first of August. For fodder or hay, cut before the seed gets out of the milk, and as much earlier as you like. If the crop is very heavy, and likely to lodge, cut as soon as the plants are in blossom. We have cut it with a mowing machine, and cured it as we do ordinary grass; and we sometimes cut it with a reaper that throws the crop into bunches. In the latter case, the horses do not trample the grass into the loose soil. The bunches are turned when necessary, and afterwards thrown in good-sized and compactly made cocks which will shed the rain. It can remain in these cocks for several days, or until there is a prospect of settled weather. The crop will well repay all the labor of sowing and cutting it. In fact, few crops in proportion to the time and labor required will pay better. Horses, cows and sheep eat it greedily, either in the green, half-cured or cured state. It is a good crop to sow.—[American Agriculturist for July.

ROUND' HOME.

Don't fail to see Diplomacy on Monday evening.

Work on the sash, door and blind factory has commenced.

Louise Dainty, in "A Mountain Pink" is booked for August 11th. More anon.

Hon. Jas. Hill, of Warren, Wis., came up on Friday last for a few days' visit.

W. H. Stuart has been on a trip below for a few days. Says times are extremely dull down there.

The Queen City Band will give a ball at the Opera House to-morrow evening. A good time is expected.

Mr. M. R. Brown has gone on a fortnight's trip to Iowa. On his return he will bring a carload or so of horses.

I. M. Underhill, Esq., arrived last week for a few days' visit. He expects to return later for a more extended visit.

Miss Eunie Copeland spent the Sabbath at Devil's Lake with Conductor Copeland and his guest, Mr. J. D. Sprague.

E. D. Childs secured a premium cheese or so and a generous supply of the premium butter at the dairymen's convention.

McManus is incubating a patent. A brilliant idea has struck him but it is thought he will recover. He declines to give it away.

Look out for the big circus next week Tuesday. It is said to carry the best menagerie in existence. Be prepared with the little shillings.

Work on the approach to the bridge to Jerome's addition seems to be making haste slowly. It ought to have been completed six weeks ago.

Polk County was represented at the dairymen's convention at Moorhead by J. O. Milne, E. D. Childs, Harry and John Wyand, Fred Dickenson, Wm. Box, Jr., and H. E. Cooke.

The Merchants' Hotel is scattered about town, part on its new and part on its old site. Excavation for the cellar for the new building to be erected on the old site is going on. The new building will be of brick.

The Wallack Theatre Company will present "Diplomacy" on Monday evening, July 6th. All who had the pleasure of hearing them last Saturday evening will be anxious to hear them again. Popular prices, 75, 50 and 35 cents.

A fine stock of goods on hand, suitable for presents etc., at bottom prices.

C. H. SAAKE, The Jewelry.

E. D. Childs & Co., received a Scotch Short-horn bull last week, one of the lot recently imported by J. J. Hill. He is a fine looking animal, one year old on March 20th and will make a noble animal in time. "Honor Bright."

Among the premiums awarded at the dairymen's convention last week, the Northwest comes in for a generous share, considering that we are so new in the business up here. We are destined to "get there" in the near future.

The Galloway bull that Childs & Co., received of J. J. Hill on June 29th '84 weighed, at that time 860 pounds. On June 1st 1885 he weighed 1329, a gain of 469 lbs. in 11 months. Mr. Child says he will make him kick the beam at a round ton before the four years are up.

The Wallack Theatre Company played to a small house on Saturday evening. Had the company been better known there would no doubt have been a better turn out. The company is one of the best that ever came to this city, and they deserve a full house on their return on the 6th inst.

Don't fail to see the White Sacred Camel, the Orleans Zouaves, the Spanish Racing Tournament, Sinbad, the Giant Black Camel, the Giant Ant Bear and the thousand and one living curiosities with Weldon & Co's. Circus which will exhibit in Crookston, Tuesday next. Everybody should see the only circus we shall have this year.

J. D. Sprague, of Holley, Orleans Co., N. Y., is spending a few days in the city, the guest of his cousin, Conductor J. B. Copeland. Mr. S. has been roaming about in this vicinity viewing the beauties thereof and seems very favorably impressed with the prospects of the country. He has spent some time in Kansas, and says that we are far ahead of all that he saw on a 400 mile pony trip through that much advertised State. He is enthusiastic over our growing wheat crop and the fine stock he has seen here.

J. O. Milne brought us a generous sample of the creamery butter which he is making on his farm, north of the city and when we say that it is the nicest and sweetest we have ever melted in our mouth we say but little—it is like a kiss—it must be experienced to be fully appreciated. Yum! yum!! YUM!!! He has rigged a tank in his milk-house over the flowing well through which the water is constantly flowing, thus keeping the temperature equal at a certain degree. He uses the deep setting method and is thus enabled to keep his cream sweet and fresh up to churning which produces the finest butter that can be made. He supplies butter to his customers by contract, delivering it in quantities to suit, at such times as it is wanted and is now making about 30 lbs. per week more than he has contracts for. If any of our readers find it difficult to get a regular supply of good fresh sweet butter they can do no better than to drop a card to J. O. Milne, city post office, who will promptly respond to such calls.

All summer goods reduced at the New York Store.

Mrs. J. A. C. Terryll and children arrived on Wednesday.

All wool black cashmere, 80 in. wide at 50c at the New York Store.

Sawing was resumed at the mill on Tuesday. The logs are coming down freely.

You can buy goods cheaper at the popular New York Store than any place in the city.

Mrs. John McKinnon and Mrs. Dan McKinnon have gone for a visit to friends in Michigan.

Somebody said something about hot weather! Just the weather for corn and it wont hurt other vegetation.

Another carload of the celebrated Champion Harvesters just receivey at Terry & Collins and are going off like hot cakes. Call early to secure seats.

If you want to buy a silk dress this week you can buy a dandy at $1.00 per yard, former price was $1.40. Brocade satins at $1.10, former price was $1.75, at the New York Store.

The Pillsbury & Hurlbut elevator is rapidly rising from its ashes and will soon be good as new. The Northwestern has not sprouted yet. There's plenty of ashes there and it should grow rapidly when it does sprout.

Dennis Violette, a Frenchman living four miles east of Gentilly, was, on Tuesday evening severely injured by a team of six-year-old mares which he was watering. He had been killing a hog in the afternoon and when he passed between the horses to water them they doubtless got a smell of blood for they both commenced to strike and kick furiously, being perfectly frantic. Mr. V. was knocked insensible, was carried to the house and a messenger sent post haste to summon Dr. Farley who, upon examination found no bones broken. The doctor is of the opinion that with no drawbacks Mr. Violette will be able to be out within a fortnight.

THE FOURTH.

There will be a basket picnic on the Fourth under the auspices of Col. Cobham Post, G. A. R., in which all the Sabbath School children will participate. The Post will assemble at their rooms at 10 a. m. and march along Main street to the Methodist church, where the Sabbath School children will join the procession, thence to the Presbyterian church, thence to the Congregational church, thence to the Baptist church, and thence on Ash street to Sampson's grove. The exercises at the grove will consist of music, reading of the Declaration of Independence, by Robert Stanton, addresses by Hon. H. Steenerson, John N. Ives, Esq., and others, dinner, games, &c.

Pink-a-ton.

Not quite. Only nine pounds as yet, but more precious than a ton to Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Pinkerton. Arrived on Sunday entirely destitute from a worldly point of view, and, being well pleased with the New Northwest, intends to remain and grow up with the country. A generous supply of cigars attests H. D's appreciation of the great event, the first boy.

"DIPLOMACY."

The Wallack Theatre Company at the Princess.—A fine Peformance and a Delighted Audience.

Manitoba Free Press.

Another good, thoroughly good, dramatic company has arrived in Winnipeg. This was the unanimous verdict of the audience at the Princess last evening. The company is under the management of Mr. Charles Frohman, and is in good hands. The play of last evening, "Diplomacy," is a new one to Winnipeg theatre goers. It cannot be classed as sensational, althoug thrillingly interesting. Its interest is of a human kind. Its scenes and incidents are strikingly natural, and it was not marred by any departure from its spirit by those who presented it last evening. There was a marked absence of ranting and stage fervor, which was evidently most gratifying to the audience. Winnipeg has too often been afflicted with people who have labored under the impression that passion can only be manifested by improbable tones and gestures not to appreciate those who understand that on the stage it is only good to be natural. The distinguishing characteristic of the Wallack Company is the uniform excellence of its members. If it contains no transcendent genius, it carries with it no "stick." This was made abundantly evident last evening. Mr. W. H. Denny was, as "Henry Beauclere," an excellent "diplomatist." Mr. John T. Sullivan, an old Winnipeg favorite, he having been here with Rhea, displayed the emotions incident to the character of "Julian Beauclere," with a quiet intensity that evinced the possession of the marked talent. Mr. Wilson manifests a disposition to speak so fast as to become unintelligible at times, which he would profit by endeavoring to correct. The parting scene between him and his young wife, "Dora," Miss Louisa Dillon, in the third act, was particularly effective. Both participants are worthy of the highest praise. The applause won by them was well merited. "Baron Stein" was finely presented by Mr. Charles Wheatleigh. The foreign accent of the part was particularly well sustained by him, there being no tendency to overdo. Mr. Rowland Buckstone as "Algie Fairfax," an Englishman of a certain sort, was perfection itself. The play is indebted to him for not a little of its life. Miss Sadie Bigelow made an extremely interesting "Countess Zicka." Miss Dillon, of whom mention has already been made, was all that could be desired as "Dora." The "Marquise de Rio Zares" was well represented by Miss Kate Denning Wilson. Miss Gracie Wilson was a very pretty and attractive "Lady Fairfax." Diplomacy will be presented at the opera house on Monday evening next. Popular prices, 75, 50 and 35. Box office now open.

I am very glad to be able to announce that my trade is steadily increasing and growing every day, and I here wish to extend my hearty thanks to the citizens of Crookston and vicinity for their large and liberal patronage in the past and hope that by a strict and close application to business to merit a continuance of the same.

Very respectfully,
C. H. SAAKE,
Practical watchmaker, jeweler and optician.

Minnesota Dairymen in Convention.

On Wednesday, June 24th, the State Dairymen's Association assembled a Moorhead for the first time in the history of the Northwest. A special train of seven coaches brought about 400 people from St. Paul and Southern Minnesota, while every train on the N. P., St. P., M. & M. and branches, and the Fargo Southern contributed its quota, making a concourse well up in the thousands. The season was one of great profit to all dairymen and inaugurates a new era for the Northwest, for an interest was awakened which will lead to the establishment of creameries and dairies and hereafter the cow will not be of secondary consideration as heretofore. We have not space to give a full and complete report of the many good things that were said, but will append a few. On the subject of "How to make the Dairy Pay," Mr. F. D. Holmes of Owatonna, said: "Dairying is a comparatively new business for the farmers in the Northwest, but the very low price for wheat and the uncertainties of the wheat crop have compelled a great many farmers to turn their attention to some branch of farming more certain of successful results. When he first came to dwell in Southern Minnesota the farmers there were all wheat farmers and no dairying of any account was carried on in that part of the State, though the farmers kept a few cows and made enough butter to supply the family through the year. Wheat at that time was a fair crop and would usually bring $1 per bushel at some time during the year, but the soil was growing poorer all the time, and about six years ago the wheat crop was a failure. Since that time wheat crops had become uncertain and prices more so. Nearly every farmer who depended on wheat was bankrupt. Others who turned their attention to stock raising and dairying had been gaining ground and their farms were getting more productive. As a general thing the Western farmers don't start out right to make a success of dairy farming. They work enough but do not think enough. Show me a good dairyman and I will show you a man who is an intelligent and thinking man. He takes the agricultural papers and keeps posted, and knows whether there is any advantage in a given course before he takes it up. Then, when he goes into a venture he goes with a vim. Until very recently four-fifths of the butter made in Minnesota by the regular farmers has been taken to the country store and traded out for goods at an enormous profit to the store-keeper of from 20 to 50 per cent. Nearly one-half the farmers of Minnesota are doing it to-day, and why? Merely because they don't know better. They do not keep posted. Beside, they have always thought dairying was a humbug. Some of the butter made by the unskilled farmers is not worth over three or four cents per pound. If this same butter was put into the creamery, or made up by intellectual farmers, it would bring 16 to 18 cents per pound. What we want, therefore, is that the farmer shall apply the same intelligence to his business that is given by the manufacturer to his business, for it takes brain to run a farm dairy business successfully as it does in the case of the machine shop. As one of the first requisites for success in dairying the speaker mentioned the proper selection of cows. There were some cows handled by dairymen that wouldn't pay their keep, while others would pay a profit of from $40 to $60 a year, with the same care and feed. Experience had taught him, he said, that heavy feeding paid the largest profit. A cow was like a piece of machinery; it took a certain amount of power to run it. All after that is profit. On the average a good cow will make from 200 to 250 pounds of butter if she is properly cared for. If she has all the good tame hay or corn fodder she will eat, good pure water, and fifteen pounds of ground feed per day, she will pay a handsome profit to her owner, provided her milk is fit for first-class butter. If she won't do this, send her to the butcher. The barn in which the cows are housed should be good, but not necessarily expensive. Build substantial and neat. The speaker urged a following out of the principles of neatness in all parts of the farm, claiming that if the farm home is made attractive the boys and girls will not be eager to leave it for city life. The winter dairying, from his own experience, was more profitable than summer dairying, on account of the better care the cows receive in the winter, the lower price of labor and the higher price of butter and cheese in the winter months. He advised all farmers who propose to start in on dairying to begin with only a few cows, increasing the number as they learned the business. It was a mistake to suppose there was a fortune in the business in one year. Dairying meant hard work if it was to meet with success."

Hon. W. G. Ledue gave a very interesting discourse upon "Minnesota as a Dairy State." He said: "Minnesota occupies the most favorable position of any State for vigorous and healthful development of animal life, and most favorably situated for commercial communication with the entire continent. The peculiarities of location, climate and soil warrant the assertion that Minnesota is and ever will be in the lead of all the world in the manufacture of butter and cheese. It is watered by a regular distribution of moisture throughout the whole year, by an average of forty or fifty inches of rain, which is extremely favorable for the production of grass and grain and animal life, and makes it the most favored place on earth for the production of the highest type of domestic animals, as well as of men, women and children. It is said that all flesh is grass. So we may say as well that milk, butter and cheese are grass. Grass is the important thing in connection with dairying, and Minnesota soil is most favorable for the growing of rich grasses. Each variety has its peculiarities of soil and climate where it best flourishes. Timothy, red top, blue grass, orchard grass, fescue are among the natural grasses and clovers; among the artificial or leguminous grasses, and all will flourish in the highest degree in the calcareous soil, blessed with abundance of sunshine and moisture; and this is the soil that Minnesota offers to the dairyman. England and Ireland are famed for their production of grass, but as compared with Minnesota or Wisconsin, or Dakota, or Manitoba grasses it will be found deficient in quality. No soil of whatever quality, with a damp, cold, foggy atmosphere, can produce grass having the excellent qualities of that grown under the influence of the bright, warm sunshine, clear sky and intensity of electrical and magnetic influence which characterize our section of the world's surface. With location most favorable to market, with climate and soil unsurpassed, what more is necessary to make Minnesota of the world? We must have a people who can read, write, think and act; educated people to make proper use of these advantages; a people who will bend everything to their purpose. The men of Minnesota, when the races represented here have become blended and homogeneous, will not suffer in comparison with any other race on earth, nor need they fear to undertake any industry in competition with any other race. In my judgment, however, the proper time has arrived to consider seriously if we have not now the right proportion of native and foreign people necessary to secure the best and most prosperous future for our state and nation. With all the advantages I have enumerated it is fitting and proper that our State should take the sweepstakes dairy prize at the New Orleans exhibition over all competitors. This is the evidence of what we may hope for. We are going onward and forward in the utilization of the growing grass, in raising more grass and more cattle and more profits in the same amount of land, and to the ultimate prosperity, independence among the farmers of Minnesota that will entitle them to take high rank among the superior people of the world."

Two days and two evenings were spent very profitably and will be long remembered by the participants, especially those who live in the Northwest, for an interest has been awakened that will tend to add thousands of dollars to our income, and will do more to solve the transportation problem than anything yet suggested. President Hill did a good thing by placing a train at the disposal of the Association as well as by furnishing transportation free to all those who wished to attend from the upper country. Only one drawback marred the perfect success in this latter particular—the announcement of free transportation was not made until the Monday preceding which prevented many knowing that such was the program.

HOLSTEINS IN GRAND FORKS.

Through the courtesy of Bro. Winship, of the Grand Forks Herald, it was our pleasure to visit the dairy farm of O. S. Freeman, situated about 1½ miles south of the city of Grand Forks, on the Red River. For the encouragement of the faint-hearted, and for the disbelievers in diversified husbandry we will take the liberty to give a bit of Mr. Freeman's experience, showing what "pluck and muscle" will accomplish. Mr. Freeman came to this country in the early day and took a homestead on the river bank, building a small log house. For several years he engaged in wheat raising wholly but soon discovered that wheat-raising alone was not the true road to independence so he bought a few cows and commenced the milk and butter business. This business proved so remunerative, in connection with wheat-raising that he soon found his quarter section inadequate and added three quarters of school land, on the prairie about one mile from his homestead. He now has over one hundred good milch cows, a large barn to accommodate them and as pleasant a farm residence as can be found in or near Grand Forks. And by the way that is saying a great deal for there are many beautiful tasty residences over there. He is making butter on the creamery plan and it was our privilege to go down into his neat cool cellar and drink our fill (no small quantity) of sweet, cool butter-milk and to see the beautiful yellow rolls of sweet rich butter. He milks eighty cows and makes over 100 lbs. of [illegible] butter per week besides running two milk wagons to supply the Grand Forks trade. His butter now brings him 35 cents per lb. and his milk five cents per quart. He employs at this season eight men in the dairy and on the farm. Realizing the necessity of a better class of dairy cows, he last fall went to Iowa and purchased a thoroughbred Holstein bull and some grade Holsteins, and this spring he has sold grade bull calves enough to pay the cost of his bull. His bull, "Lord Northwood" is three past, and is one of the finest specimens of the thoroughbred Holstein ever brought to this country. He does not know his exact weight but we should say that he will not go less than 2,500. When we say that he is a magnificent animal that is as near as we can describe him without his picture to show what he really is. We can only add that it is worth a trip to the farm any day just to see this magnificent animal and we advise all of our friends who have occasion to visit Grand Forks by all means to go and see "Lord Northwood." Mr. Freeman told us that he considers the secret of success in this country lies in diversified husbandry, and after viewing the evidences we are prepared to believe him. We were told that he came to this country without a dollar and he is now independent, with as lovely a home as can be found in the valley. Hail, hoppers or any insect enemies to which the tender wheat plant is heir to has no terrors for Mr. Freeman for he has not all his irons in one fire. He is not dependent on wheat alone. If he makes a good crop it is all margin and if he does not he is only out the seed and labor while the benefit of his stock to his place is incalculable. Mr. J. O. Milne, an extensive Holstein breeder of Crookston, who went with us to see "Lord Northwood," pronounces him one of the finest animals in the country and he is a judge of such things having on his farm, two miles from Crookston a two-year old Holstein, "EVERETT" an animal that has never yet been defeated in the show-ring, and who has proved himself to be an extraordinary stock getter, strong and sure. We have long urged the importance of diversified husbandry and while we have PREACHED, Mr. Freeman has been PRACTICING and has so fully demonstrated our theory that the JOURNAL is proud to have the privilege of being thus highly endorsed. And again we would advise our grain growing farmers to go over and see what Mr. Freeman is doing for himself and this country. It will well repay the time and labor expended.

Complete Organization of the Steam-Threshers' Mutual Association of Minnesota.

Word having been received here that the articles of incorporation were all right, a meeting was called for the purpose of electing officers for the new organization with the following result:

President—J. B. Merrill, of Fisher.

Secretary—John Wyand.

Treasurer—M. G. Leguee.

Board of Directors, Polk County.—Louis Berthiaume, J. B. Merrill, Wm. Marin, M. G. Leguee, Fred Dickenson, F. Lytle, J. Wallace.

Marshall County—Dr. Stone, A. McKay, Thos. McMahan.

Mechanical Adviser to the Board—J. Wallace.

A false impression prevails that the object of the Association is opposition to the boiler inspection law. As the Board of Directors are the controlling power, the following rule will settle that point. "The board desire a proper, honest, and faithful boiler inspection law. Such a law will be a benefit to the threshing machine interest. The Board will aid the State in enforcing such a law. But it is well known that men appointed to office by the government are appointed more for their ability to get there than from any qualification they may have to fill the office; and as the lives and property of the threshing machine men are at stake it is right and proper that they organize for their protection now and hereafter.

By order of the Board."

It is expected that by the time the next Legislature meets this organization will have spread over the entire State, and as there is not an organized township in Minnesota that has not one or more threshing machine men, it is expected that by that time they will be able to accomplish in that line all that the country needs.

Much interest is being aroused on this subject and the meeting was large and enthusiastic. A special meeting of the Association will be held at Ericson's Hall, Tuesday, July 7th, at two o'clock p. m., to which all threshing machine men are invited.

J. WALLACE, Secretary.

Do you know that we alone give a GRAND SPANISH RACING TOURNAment in which Elephants, Ostriches, Camels, Bloodhounds, Bicyclers, Equestrians and Pedestrians all do join. Equally prominent in the Arenic Firmament will appear the Troupe of Royal Japanese and the Wonderful Spanish Female Fire Jugglers and Necromancers.

SINBAD, THE GIANT BLACK CAMEL,
The huge, black "Desert Ship," towering like a temple and dwarfing into ridoule the tallest elephants ever seen. Speaking of giants, there are the TALL AND STATELY EMUES, the very largest of their lofty, featheren kind, and the GIANT ANT BEAR, looking down upon its Abyssinian colleagues from its growing altitude. Then think of an Elevated Stage, upon which Bycycle Experts and Russian Roller Skaters divulge fantastic sciences. There never was the like before. There are a thousand strange sights to be seen in the Menagerie that are totally unlike those usually seen in animal collections. It would be human folly, in this limit of space, to attempt the merest outline of the hundreds of novel and sensational attractions that constitute the claim of excellence for OUR SUPREMELY GREATEST SHOWS. Presented free, in the glare of the noonday sun, will be a Farmers' Meeting.

To the Wheat growers and business men of Northern Minnesota and Northern Dakota:

It is hereby announced that a meeting is called at the city of Moorhead on the 7th and 8th days of July next, at the Bruns opera house, at which time and place the State Board of railroad and warehouse commissioners of Minnesota will be present; also the chief grain inspector of the State and as many of the chief deputy inspectors as can conveniently come will be present. Several questions of the greatest importance to the wheat growers and business men of Northern Minnesota and Northern Dakota will be considered, among which will be considered freight rates and wheat grades and untrammeled markets. We would suggest that farmers and delegates to this meeting, so far as convenient, bring samples of wheat grown in their respective sections. Will all editors of newspapers of these Northern wheat-growing sections, be so kind as to keep a permanent notice of the meeting in their respective papers until after the event. Also will said editors please consider themselves self-appointed delegates to this meeting.

By order of farmers' committee.

A. M. BURDICK, Chairman.

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

JUDGE MARTIN ON LIQUOR-SELLING.

Hon. John Martin, of Kansas, before whom a Pottawatomie County liquor-seller was tried and convicted on twenty-one counts for selling liquor in violation of the prohibitory law, addressed the culprit at length upon passing sentence upon him. We quote as follows:

"Not only for your benefit, but for the benefit of and a warning to others who may be inclined to engage in the business which has led you to your present troubles, I think I may properly make some suggestions at this time respecting this traffic, the effect and influence of which suggestions I hope may not be without good results.

For more than twenty years I have had ample opportunities for observing the working and effect of the business of selling intoxicating liquors, and I have not been able to discover a single feature, circumstance, or result that can commend it to the favorable consideration of any decent, respectable or thoughtful man, and in this conclusion I think that you and all others will agree with me. It cannot even challenge the admiration or approval of ordinary bad men. I cannot conceive of any business or occupation more thoroughly demoralizing in its tendences and effects, or more destructive of public morals, public order, and public decency, than the business of selling intoxicating liquors. I cannot conceive a solitary benefit or advantage to be derived from it by a single human being. I cannot imagine a blessing or a benefit of any kind that it brings or contributes to the welfare of a community. It brings moral and social death to those who engage in it, as well as those who patronize and sustain it. From its very nature it brings you into contact with murderers, thieves, robbers, gamblers, drunkards, and every vicious element and class in society. That such associations can elevate or develop a man's character intellectually, socially, or morally is simply impossible. Tht such associations will inevitably and always drag others down to the level of its own baseness and degradation is absolutely certain, and under such circumstances and with this common knowledge which all men must possess, I am utterly unable to understand how it is possible for any man with any sense of decency or any appreciation of manhood or any sentiment of honor, or anyone having any hopes or aspirations for respectable, social, or moral standing in the community, or having any regard for the confidence and respect of his fellow-men, to reconcile himself to the idea of becoming a common vender of intoxicating liquors. It seems to me that to engage in such a business is to deliberately crush and banish from the heart forever every sentiment, every hope, every ambition, and every element of character that men generally value as being useful and beneficial to the world. It blights and destroys men's intellectual powers, and thus it makes our insane, idiots, and imbeciles. It deadens every sentiment of morality, decency, and honor, and thus men become debauched, corrupt, vicious, dishonest, and destitute of all sense of shame and of every obligation of family relationship, friendship, and citizenship.

It begets recklessness, and an utter indifference to and disregard of the rights, the interests, and the happiness of others. It invites, encourages and necessarily develops all that is base, degrading and dangerous in men, and destructive of good government, good order and common decency. It is a nursery for the development and growth of all those wicked practices which lead to the crimes of bambling (which after all is but another name for different forms of stealing), theft, robbery, arson, perjury, murder and every sort of public crime, social wrong and private indecency. In other words, it is a school-house for the development and cultivation of every species of crime, and an institution for the preparation of men, women and children for the gutter, the poor-house, and insane asylum, the reform schools, the county jail, the penitentiary and the gallows. But this is not all; and while it makes men idiots and imbeciles by robbing them of their reason, and makes drunkards, destroys all self-respect, blights and blasts all manly aspirations, it also despoils men of their property, and makes homeless and hungry wives and children, who shiver and starve in winter, and starve and burn in summer. And, after all, these are but a few of the evil consequences and bad results out of the long list of crimes and miseries that necessarily flow from the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors. It may be possible that an honest man of ordinary intelligence may engage in such a business, but to me it seems impossible. A man who willingly engages in it deliberately defies the law, and at once proclaims himself an enemy to public order, public decency and every interest, public and private, calculated to benefit the State, and that makest for the welfare of humanity.—[The Prohibitionist.

A COMMON BUT FOOLISH ARGUMENT.

How often in the history of the temperance reformation has the following argument been advanced against total abstinence from intoxicating drinks: "Gluttony is just as bad as drunkenness, and you may kill yourself with eating as well as with drinking, but you do not therefore propose total abstinence from food, or even from any kind of food, such, for instance, as beef, bread, milk, etc." How often have we heard this choice bit of logic propounded as quite new and conclusive! Of course the ingenuity which found it out was rewarded with the complacent smiles of the discoverer. He did not see that the cases are not at all similar. Food is necessary for man and so is drink, but it is not necessary that he should eat poisoned meat or drink poisoned water. On the contrary, it is his bounden duty, laid on him by the Sixth Commandment, to eschew poison in every shape. But all intoxicating drinks are made such by poison. The very work intoxicating means poisoning, and all scientific authorities are agreed upon the point that the alcohol which makes them intoxicating is poison. The argument that is thought so conclusive, therefore has no basis to support it. There is no analogy or comparison between abstinence from wholesome food and from intoxicating drinks. In the one case abstinence would be self murder in the other abstinence would be health, strength, peace and comfort.

Let us look at this favorite argument of drinkers in another light. When did bread or beef or any wholesome food fill police offices, jails penitentiaries, poorhouses, and insane asylums with the victims of over-eating as they are filled by the victims of alcoholic drinks? Surely the dullest apprehension will give up an argument so groundless and absurd as that to which each generation of teetotallers must respond. To make a law against the sale of bread, bacon, beef, milk, or any kind of wholesome food because some alderman had died of surfeit—one in a million—would be the extreme of folly, but to prohibit the sale of putrid meat or unwholesome milk is quite right. And so it is quite right to forbid the sale of poisoned drink, which is English for intoxicating drink, the use of which as a beverage is not only quite unnecessary, as is proved by the experience of millions, but certainly injurious.

It is agreed among the scientists of life insurance companies that the total abstainers from alcoholic drinks have a far better probability of long life than even moderate drinkers, who, by the way, have a tendency to increase their doses of poison drinks. Some put the average teetotallers' lives as ten years, fifteen years, or even twenty years longer than that of the average drinkers. Now, what do you call the great class who are shortening their days ten or twenty years by indulgence in intoxicating drinks? Are they not in a very positive sense self murderers, and consequently under the condemnation of the sixth commandment? It may be answered that there are many instances of men who use liquor freely, such, for instance, as Bismarck, who live to a great age; but Bismarck, though a very strong man, has plenty of troubles, and if he had been a teetotaller all along he would now have a far higher expectation of life than he has.

No, no, no! we cannot compare poisoned drink in any way with wholesome food, except as a contrast; and if we prohibit the sale of the watered milk and oleomargarine and all adulteration or deception, however harmless, surely we can, as a nation, prohibit the sale of the poisoned liquors which are doing more harm than all our other evils put together. There are quite enough of natural temptations to sin and crime without adding an unnatural temptation, which is the worst of all.

A man desiring to make money and not satisfied to engage in lawful, legitimate business, applies to a city government for the privilege of establishing his business is bad. You rob the poor men of their wages, you beggar their families, make their homes desolate, you destroy their happiness, you make of them vagabonds and finally send them to drunkards graves, you fill our jails with criminals, you cause the death of our loved ones, you rob them of their reason, there is no redeeming quality about your business; yet we will give you a chance to ruin our city if you will pay five hundred dollars into the treasury. The city council is no worse than the men who elected them by their ballots. The worst, the darkest and blackest side of this dark picture is found in the support this infamous business has among the pretended followers of Christ, and especially among those ministers who polute the altars of the living God in advocating high license. Sodom and Gomorrah were, but are not, having been blotted from the face of the earth and their location no man knoweth, yet it shall be more tolerable for these places which God has utterly destroyed in the day of judgment than for these men who advocate the licensing of a business that defiles the temple of the living God and brings woe upon the inhabitants of the earth.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

By the Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior, prepared and reported semi-monthly for the Polk County Journal by Archibald Young, Attorney at Law and late Examiner of Mining, Railroad, Homestead, Pre-emption and other contest cases in General Land Office. Office 637 F. St., Washington, D. C.

PRACTICE.

Proceedings in a contest not abated by death of preemptor. (Acting Secr'y May 19.

2d. Full opportunity allowed claimants to show all facts in their behalf. Application for review of a decision not based on testimony taken at a hearing does not fall within the rule governing applications for review after issue joined. (Exparte Cayce, Comm. June 14, 1885.)

3d. Motion for continuance, containing no allegation of surprise at opponents testimony, should not be allowed, if filed after commencement of trial. (Hicks vs. Barnum, Acting Secr'y. June 5, 1885.)

4th. Application for a rehearing does not necessarily admit correctness of the decision nor cut off right of appeal. The time between the filing of motion for rehearing or review and action thereon, is excluded in computing the time allowed for appeal. (Withee vs. Martin, Acting Secr'y May 19, 1885.)

HOMESTEADS.

Occasional visits to and staying a few rights on the land do not constitute residence. (Henney vs. Peterson and Gray vs. Gilfillan, Commr. May 2d and June 5th, 1885.)

2d. Where a H'd. entry was canceled for failure to make proof in time and notice of cancellation was not received by claimant, the entry should be reinstated and confirmed upon proof showing full compliance with law in other respects and that the failure was owing to the entryman's ignorance, notwithstanding land had been selected in meantime for railroad purposes. (Broussard vs. Lros. Actinging Commr. May 5, 1885.)

PREEMPTIONS.

Settlement not sustained unless claimant has made some substantial improvements on the tract which would indicate to the world his intention to claim the same. (Teets vs. Campbell. Acting Secr'y. April 30th, 1885.)

TIMBER CULTURE.

Record evidence as to date of filing a prior contest affidavit may be overcome by any other competent testimony and error corrected. (Myers vs. Lydensticker. Acting Sec'y. May 15, 1885.)

Of the characteristics of the Guernseys, Mr. Henry Pierce, of the Yerba Beuna ranch, Santa Clara County, who has the only herd of Guernseys in California, gives the following sketch in his pamphlet:

"The Guernsey, in form, is a rangy, deep animal, with plenty of udder development, and short, clean legs. She has a full, fine eye, clean throat and muzzle, and is a stylish-looking animal. The prevailing colors are orange, red-and-white, but they are to be found in all other colors except roan.

The most remarkable characteristic of the Guernsey is the richness of the animal. It is seen in every point. The horn is soft and full of color, the hoofs are usually like tortoise shell, the skin is soft and of a golden yellow tint, and the inside of the ears is still more highly colored, while the same orange hue seems to glow from the bag as if there were light under the soft skin. In the mature, well-bred animal, both eye and hand find evidence that all secretions are rich and of high quality.

The disposition of these cattle is remarkably gentle and affectionate. On the Island their care is usually confided to women and children, whose gentle ways are reflected in the quiet demeanor of their family favorites. In driving through the green lanes of the Island, the visitor will see many beautiful scenes of children, when scarcely large enough to toddle along, leading cattle to water with one end of the trail string that is sufficient to secure the obedience of the beautiful animal, which really seems fitted to be the guardian.

CATTLE FOR DAIRY PURPOSES.

To the Breeder's Gazette:

Having noticed in The Gazette of a late issue an article from "T. H. S." on "Cattle for Dairy Purposes," and being a friend of the dairy breeds, and a breeder of Holstein-Friesian cattle at the present time, and having had some experience with Short-horns (was raised on a farm among Short-horn cattl), I cannot refrain from saying something back for our side of the house.

It rather appears to me that "T. H. S." is going beyond his bounds and treading on corns of dairy breeders when he says that the Short-horns are not surpassed as milk and butter producers. I know nothing of the record these cattle are making in the old country (but no doubt they do better in their native country, the same as all other breeds) but will say that the Islington records were made where the Dutch herds are not known to exhibit. Let us try and compare the government report from Saxony, for seven years, and an average number of fifty-five Holstein cows making the yearly average of 8715 lbs. of milk per cow, to that of "T. H. S.," taken from J. O. Morton's work, "Dairy Husbandry," in which the yearly returns of two dairy farms are given. Mr. Wright, of Chipstead, Surrey, reports from fifty well-fed Short-horn cows a yearly average of 750 gals. per cow, and 650 from the second farm, of which we will take the larger, 750 gals. per cow equal to 6,000 lbs. per cow, and allowing 18 lbs. of milk to a pound of butter, according to Mr. George Simpson's report in the same record, we have as a result 333⅓ lbs. of butter per cow.

Now let us take the yearly average of the Holsteins, 8,715 lbs. of milk per cow, which is equal to 1,089⅜ gals. per cow, and allow 25 lbs. of milk to a pound of butter (of course we must admit the Short-horn milk is richer than the Holstein, although I was never able to detect the difference myself.) Twenty-five pounds of milk to a pound of butter is a fair estimate on grass and will make a large estimate for the entire year, for 20 lbs. on grain will make a pound of butter. Allowing the former estimate of 25 lbs. we have 348 3-5 lbs. of butter per cow, which results in favor of the Holsteins of 14 4-15 lbs. more butter per cow a year, 339⅜ more gallons and 1,715 more pounds of milk to make cheese of or feed to the pigs.

We also have a report from Mr. Harding, of Kentuckey, who has published a pamphlet on modern butter-making. He says: "I have written to all the famous breeders of dairy stock in the country to get information sufficient to settle the vexed question as to which is the best butter breed. The result shows the following yearly average of herds of not less than ten cows: Short-horns, 252 lbs. 8 oz.; Ayrshires, 278 lbs.; Jerseys, 281 lbs.; natives, 302 lbs.; Holsteins, 350 lbs.

Now if "T. H. S." has any individual records to report from his own herd we would like to hear them; and allowing me to intrude upon your valuable space, I would like to make a proposition to "T. H. S." We have two Holstein heifers—one twenty-two months old, the other a little past two years old, that are giving an average of 50 lbs. of milk per day each on grass alone that will test twenty-two per cent cream, and if "T. H. S." has a pair of Short-horn heifers in his herd of the same age that will beat them in a contest for milk, butter and general appearance, I will transfer them in the herd book to his name and pay the transportation on them to his farm. THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

Wallack's Theatre Company, on their return visit was greeted by a better audience than before. The play, "Diplomacy," was well rendered, showing that each actor and actress was a genuine artist, and it was heartily enjoyed by all. Many and favorable were the comments that were made and the universal verdict was one of approval.

Weldon & Co's circus appeared as per announcement in our advertising columns. The menagerie was not very extensive but the circus was very good, some of the acting being exceptionally fine, as, for instance, the drunken act, which was so natural as to ALMOST deceive the very police! The crowd was not very great but were well satisfied with the performances.

Berthiaume Bro's wish to announce to the citizens of Crookston and vicinity that in a few days they will have a complete outfit of gold pens, tooth picks, pencils and novelty charms. This outfit will be put into an extra case which will contain $500 worth of gold pens and pencils, all the latest designs and patterns; such a case as the boys will have has not been seen west of Chicago, of which fact they will convince you in a few days.

Notwithstanding no particular demonstration or effort was made, the 4th of July came as near being a big day as you could get and miss it. Early in the day crowds began to come in from the country and the meagre preparations that had been made were seized upon with avidity and eagerness, and if nothing more was accomplished, it was clearly shown that if there had been gumption enough to have gotten up a celebration the crowd would not have been lacking. The Sunday Schools, assisted by the G. A. R., got up a sort of a basket picnic in Sampson's grove, while another crowd went to Barrett's Addition and improvised games of all kinds. Fireworks and fun were the order of the day and everybody—i. e. most everybody—seemed to have had a huge time.

On Saturday afternoon, the wife of G. H. Pollard took a half-ounce of laudanum and came very near dying from its effects. After careful inquiry, the facts in the case as stated by the physician are as follows: It seems that G. H. had signed the pledge and had kept it until Saturday last up till seven in the evening. There had been some kind of a row in the afternoon and Mrs. P. had got the idea that it was to be continued up on the beer garden grounds and became fearful least her husband should be led to drink again and become involved, so she went up, arriving about seven o'clock and requested him to go home with her. This espoinage it is said settled Mr. P. who at once went to the stand and drank some beer, but soon after returned home with his wife. The woman was in a very nervous frame of mind and they had some words after arriving home, when Mrs. P. poured about a half-ounce of laudanum into a glass and threatened to take it. Making some trivial remark Mr. P. left the house, and the woman, now desperate, drank the laudanum. Dr. Cable was quickly summoned, who, by a powerful emetic reduced the dose enough to save her life, but he was at work nearly all the night. Mrs. P. expresses great regret over the rash act and does not see how she could have done it. It is said for Mr. P. that he has strictly kept his pledge up to that hour and that he avows his determination to do so in the future. We sincerely trust that he will. There has been so many false and ridiculous stories concerning the affair, that the JOURNAL deems a simple narration of the facts in the case due to all concerned and gives it as learned from the physician in charge. Mrs. P. has almost fully recovered from the effects of the poison and will be all right in a few

B. D. Massey, of the town of Reis, was brought before Esq. Palmer last week, charged with selling liquor without having first secured a license. It seems upon the evidence that Massey obtained a county license on Feb. 10th, and on March 10th the town of Reis voted no license. It having been shown that he had procured the license properly the charge could not be sustained and Massey was discharged from custody.

John Sheley, of Ada, has been appointed chief inspector at Duluth, and John McKenzie, of this city, assistant. These appointments will give eminent satisfaction throughout the Northwest wherever these gentlemen are known. While we regret to lose them from our midst we congratulate them heartily and we feel confident that our interests in Duluth will be in as safe hands as could be.

On the 4th, while attempting to get a prisoner to the cooler, Marshall Dowling found it necessary to call in extra aid and Dr. J. H. Thomas, being near, was called on in the name of the people to aid. The prisoner was being conveyed through the lane between the doctor's building and Prof. Thompson's barber shop and was catching hold of every stationary object he saw. The doctor caught his hands and froze him loose and aided to get him in the center of the lane and headed for the cooler, then turned to talk with Pete Misgen. While talking, he heard some one talking in a loud voice, using insulting language; turning to see what it was he met a sledge-hammer blow from a bystander and then the fun commenced. The man who had thus tackled the doctor scratched and bit and chawed like a fury, biting the end of the doctor's thumb off and polishing him up until he looked like he had walked through a sausage grinder, head-foremost. The man has been arrested for mayhem and will doubtless settle the matter in the district court.

Dan's Little Mistake.

During the ring performance, Tuesday, a drunken man staggered into the circus tent and leaning up against a tent pole commenced to whoop and shout at the performers in the ring. A large portly man occupying a reserved seat was very much annoyed and rising, crustily ordered the poor galoot to "get out of the way so I can see, will you!" The only attention the d. m. made was to approach the ring and leaning on the rope fall headlong into the ring from which he was promptly pitched by the indignant ring master. At this juncture special police Dan McDonald stepped up and clapped his hand onto the VERY DRUNK man, ordering him to "come along with me!" The drunk lifted an innocent gaze into Dan's open countenance and gave the pass word or something, and the way Dan dropped that man like a hot tater, blushed and went out to see how the animals were getting along, was enough to bring down that audience with howls of laughter, and it did. Some of the audience were as thoroughly deceived as Dan and could not see "what the fools were all howling about!" They were undeceived later when the drunken man entered the ring, was helped upon a horse and doffing his citizen's rig appeared in full blown tights—a thorough-bred performer.

THE CROOKSTON NURSERY.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the catalogue of this flourishing institution, and deeming this a good opportunity for a sort of review of the Crookston Nursery, we interviewed its genial proprietor, Mr. Frank T. Haseltine, who cheerfully submitted to be probed. The Crookston Nursery was established in the spring of 1879, by Frank T. Haseltine, on 10 acres of ground rented of Mr. E. C. Davis. In the spring of 1881 Frank took his brother, Elwin W. Haseltine, into partnership, and in the spring of 1882 Elmer F. Haseltine was taken into the partnership; this partnership continued until June, 1883, when it was dissolved, Elmer selling his interest to his brothers and retiring to his farm. Frank T. and E. W. then divided stock equally, with the stipulation that E. W. was to have until June 1st, 1884, to dispose of his share or to prepare a place to remove it to. Before June 1st, 1884, E. W., having secured a plot on the Red Lake Falls road, in the eastern part of the city, removed his stock and established a new nursery, which he now calls the Northwestern Nursery, Frank T. Haseltine retaining his share of the stock upon the original Crookston Nursery grounds and remaining sole proprietor thereof. He now has, in addition, 12 acres devoted wholly to forest trees on a 40 acre tract which he owns adjacent to the old grounds, the whole of which tract will soon be devoted wholly to nursery purposes. On the original grounds he has three acres in strawberries, two acres in currants and raspberries, and the balance devoted to the growing of large fruit stock, willows, forest trees and vegetables, all in a very thrifty condition. Mr. Haseltine has devoted much time and expense in experimenting with the kinds and varieties best adapted to this country and climate, and will recommend none but what he has thoroughly tested and found to be fully adapted to the uses of his patrons and the country. In filling his orders he uses great care to send out nothing but the most thrifty, healthy trees and plants, and whenever a failure from such cause exists he will always supply the defect. He has labored hard and faithfully to build up a creditable reputation for the Crookston Nursery, and takes a just pride in its future, as he intends to be a permanent institution, and among the leading industries of our young and flourishing city. Our city has just cause to be proud of the Crookston Nursery and if the efforts of its proprietor, Mr. Frank T. Haseltine, will count for anything, she will never have reason to change. We are glad to note that Mr. Haseltine's sales for this year have exceeded by far any sales of any previous year ever made by the Crookston Nursery, and we can only say that it is a just appreciation of the efforts of a worthy man to build up a reputation and to keep up with the times. Success to the Crookston Nursery and its enterprising [illegible] Mr. Frank T. Haseltine, say we.

Dairying Statistics.

The capital invested in the dairy business of the United States is computed to be over $200,000,000, and to employ about 700,000 men and nearly 1,000,000 horses. An officer of the English milk producers' association says: "The average cow yields about 450 gallons of milk a year, giving a total product of about 6,750,000,000 gallons. Twelve cents a gallon is a fair price to estimate the value of this milk at a total return to the dairy farmer of $810,000,000. Fifty per cent. of the milk is made into cheese and butter. It takes 27 pounds of milk to make one pound of butter and ten pounds of milk to make one pound of cheese. There is the same amount of nutrition in 3½ pounds of milk that there is in one pound of beef, but it would require about 24,000,000 steers, weighing 1,500 pounds each, to produce the same amount of nutriment as the annual milk product does."

THE HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN ASSOCIATION.

Farmers Advocate & Northwestern Stockman.

The officers and executive committee of the Holstein-Friesian Breeder's Association, in attendance upon the recent summer meeting of the State Dairymen's Association at Moorhead, took advantage of the same to hold a business meeting at which a committee consisting of S. M. Emery, president, W. M. Leggett, vice president, and M. J. Myers, secretary, was appointed to procure the incorporation of the Association under the State law, and the following new members elected: A. H. Reed, Glencoe; O. E. Olson, Marsh River; H. E. Cooke, Crookston; J. O. Milne, Crookston; A. E. Henderson, Sabin; F. M. Pond, Bloomington; G. W. Baird, Medina Mills; A. Harington, Rochester; J. M. Underwood, Lake City; A. Doughty, Lake City; Jerre Allis, Isinours; E. D. Childs, Carman. It was voted to hold the next meeting the week of the State Fair, and the annual meeting the first Tuesday in March next, in connection with the State Dairymen's Association. The secretary M. J. Myers, gave notice that he would soon have an indexed list of all Holstein-Friesian cattle in the State, and would hereafter make and report all transfers through the Advocate and Stockman weekly. To assist him in this work, the secretary desires us to request all owners of these cattle to furnish him with complete lists of their stock, male and female, and also to report to him promptly all purchases and sales. Mr. Myers informs us that there are at least 600 head of Holstein-Friesian cattle in the State at this time, and that the herd of Messrs. Wilcox & Leggett at Benson and Kirkhoven, is one of the largest and choicest in the country [illegible]

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

An Address by a Graduate of the State University at the Commencement Exercises, June 1885.

Any system of traffic which directly or indirectly interferes with these three grand institutions of government, the home, the church, and the State, is in direct opposition to civilization and society. The liquor traffic is everywhere conceded to be not only a vice, but the prolific source of all vices, social and national, that effect our race. Why then should it exist? Why should it not be prohibited by law?

Is it said that our personal liberty will be interfered with? What is liberty, without law? And what is law, if it sanction the propagation of vice, misery and crime? There is in our democracy no principal more prominent than that which guarantees to government the right of self-preservation.

When the war-cloud rises in the horizon the nation comes into our homes, it lays hands upon husband and son, it drags them away from friends and family, it places them in the tented field against their will and against ours. This it has a right to do for its own protection. Government just as truly has a right to shut up any shop, interfere with any industry, stop the wheels of any business, do whatever it will to protect itself from degradation and distruction, and no man can stand up and say, "my rights are interfered with." The iron bulwark of the law is set against gambling, lotteries and the sale of poisons in other forms, and why not in this?

But 'tis said, "we cannot afford to abolish a traffic from which we derive the greater part of our revenue." Overlooking the rapidly increasing expenses of jails, prisons and poorhouses, the destruction of life and property thro' which the sale of liquor costs the government ten-fold the whole amount of the revenue.

Disregarding the degradation of manhood and womanhood, the destruction of the best blood of our nation, they consider only this, comparatively, mean and paltry revenue. What argument! Sanction a traffic that annually robs the people of $1,400,000,000, that the government may derive $70,000,000 of revenue therefrom. Marvelous statesmanship!

Again we are told that this method of reform is not practiced. 'Tis never deemed practical in this world to work for truth and righteousness. From the day that that cry drove back the children of Israel to wander forty years in the wilderness to the present it has with temporary efficacy been raised against every reform of existing society.

Dispite this faithless generation (the affliction of every age) great and successful reforms have marked the progress of society and gained for mankind, greater liberty and more wide spread happiness. Who shall say that prohibition can not succeed until it has been tried and proven a failure? And so long as legislatures refuse to submit this question to the people, who shall say that the time is not ripe for such trial? Sixteen legislatures have refused to submit this question to the mass of voters. In one case (Ohio) where the majority had already expressed themselves in its favor.

Finally we are confronted by those who are fully conscious of the extent of this evil and the need of reform are waiting for public sentiment to reach that high standard at which it will be impossible for such evils to exist, a time when virtue shall triumph in society and vice and low passions shall slink away into their native darkness. When will that day come if we sit idly down and wait? Who is it? What is it that creates public sentiment? Does it create itself? Has it not always been aroused by the earnest protest of patriot and statesman? Shall we enlist public sentiment against this evil by throwing the protecting arm of license around the traffic? By giving it the sanction of law and classing it with legitimate and respectable business? This reform is not gaining ground while we by lopping off the branches add strength to the trunk and aid the root to gain a firmer hold on society. Only when we strike at the root of the evil will our efforts succeed. Then, tho' the top may seem for a time to flourish, when the roots are at length cut off, death will be sudden and sure.

Law itself is a national teacher, and tho' the impulses of a particular occasion may raise public sentiment above the standard of legal institutions, the morality of a people cannot be maintained above the morality of their laws.

The voice of history bears witness that the laws of a country may reconcile public sentiment to crime in its blackest forms.

When polygamy is allowed, a plurality of wives is respectable, when gambling houses are licensed that vice cannot be made disgraceful, and so long as we license this traffic a high standard of public sentiment cannot be reached.

The great hope of this reform is that it has had and still has radical advocates. These men have been called enthusiasts, agitators, cranks, cranks. So have all great reformers, and yet their work is manifest. Tho' this movement has heretofore received no recognition, tho' it has been pushed aside again and again by political parties it has now reached a point where it can be pushed aside no longer. The hour has struck for its consideration, and it will never cease to agitate the public mind until this whole system of traffic is proscribed and dethroned.

Tho' the enemy be organized and unscrupulous, tho' untold wealth and powerful influence are arrayed against this reform, we need not diepair. The light whose dawn ushers in a new and brighter morn rarely shines from palace and crown but from the manger and the cross! This movement has with it the moral forces of the race, and "before the aroused conscience of the people, wielding the indomitable will of the State, the ministers of vice, tempters of innocence, and destroyers of humanity shall go down forever!

As we look into the future with eyes enlightened with trust in divine providence by faith in human courage, fidelity and virtue, we may behold our nation, fair to-day, yet fairer by far than now, having added to her crown of virtues, the star of national sobriety. Moving down the solemn pathway of the ages, an image of just, intelligent, benficent power!"

THE CROOKSTON NURSERY.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the catalogue of this flourishing institution, and deeming this a good opportunity for a sort of review of the Crookston Nursery, we interviewed its genial proprietor, Mr. Frank T. Haseltine, who cheerfully submitted to be probed. The Crookston Nursery was established in the spring of 1879, by Frank T. Haseltine, on 10 acres of ground rented of Mr. E. C. Davis. In the spring of 1881 Frank took his brother, Elwin W. Haseltine, into partnership, and in the spring of 1882 Elmer F. Haseltine was taken into the partnership; this partnership continued until June, 1883, when it was dissolved, Elmer selling his interest to his brothers and retiring to his farm. Frank T. and E. W. then divided stock equally, with the stipulation that E. W. was to have until June 1st, 1884, to dispose of his share or to prepare a place to remove it to. Before June 1st, 1884, E. W., having secured a plot on the Red Lake Falls road, in the eastern part of the city, removed his stock and established a new nursery, which he now calls the Northwestern Nursery, Frank T. Haseltine retaining his share of the stock upon the original Crookston Nursery grounds and remaining sole proprietor thereof. He now has, in addition, 12 acres devoted wholly to forest trees on a 40 acre tract which he owns adjacent to the old grounds, the whole of which tract will soon be devoted wholly to nursery purposes. On the original grounds he has three acres in strawberries, two acres in currants and raspberries, and the balance devoted to the growing of large fruit stock, willows, forest trees and vegetables, all in a very thrifty condition. Mr. Haseltine has devoted much time and expense in experimenting with the kinds and varieties best adapted to this country and climate, and will recommend none but what he has thoroughly tested and found to be fully adapted to the uses of his patrons and the country. In filling his orders he uses great care to send out nothing but the most thrifty, healthy trees and plants, and whenever a failure from such cause exists he will always supply the defect. He has labored hard and faithfully to build up a creditable reputation for the Crookston Nursery, and takes a just pride in its future, as he intends to be a permanent institution, and among the leading industries of our young and flourishing city. Our city has just cause to be proud of the Crookston Nursery and if the efforts of its proprietor, Mr. Frank T. Haseltine, will count for anything, she will never have reason to change. We are glad to note that Mr. Haseltine's sales for this year have exceeded by far any sales of any previous year ever made by the Crookston Nursery, and we can only say that it is a just appreciation of the efforts of a worthy man to build up a reputation and to keep up with the times. Success to the Crookston Nursery and its enterprising pro[illegible]r, Frank T. Haseltine, say we.

Dairying Statistics.

The capital invested in the dairy business of the United States is computed to be over $200,000,000, and to employ about 700,000 men and nearly 1,000,000 horses. An officer of the English milk producers' association says: "The average cow yields about 450 gallons of milk a year, giving a total product of about 6,750,000,000 gallons. Twelve cents a gallon is a fair price to estimate the value of this milk at a total return to the dairy farmer of $810,000,000. Fifty per cent. of the milk is made into cheese and butter. It takes 27 pounds of milk to make one pound of butter and ten pounds of milk to make one pound of cheese. There is the same amount of nutrition in 8½ pounds of milk that there is in one pound of beef, but it would require about 24,000,000 steers, weighing 1,500 pounds each, to produce the same amount of nutriment as the annual milk product does."

THE HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN ASSOCIATION.

Farmers Advocate & Northwestern Stockman.

The officers and executive committee of the Holstein-Friesian Breeder's Association, in attendance upon the recent summer meeting of the State Dairymen's Association at Moorhead, took advantage of the same to hold a business meeting at which a committee consisting of S. M. Emery, president, W. M. Leggett, vice president, and M. J. Myers, secretary, was appointed to procure the incorporation of the Association under the State law, and the following new members elected: A. H. Reed, Glencoe; O. E. Olson, Marsh River; H. E. Cooke, Crookston; J. O. Milne, Crookston; A. E. Henderson, Sabin; F. M. Pond, Bloomington; G. W. Baird, Medina Mills; A. Harington, Rochester; J. M. Underwood, Lake City; A. Doughty, Lake City; Jerre Allis, Isinours; E. D. Childs, Carman. It was voted to hold the next meeting the week of the State Fair, and the annual meeting the first Tuesday in March next, in connection with the State Dairymen's Association. The secretary M. J. Myers, gave notice that he would soon have an indexed list of all Holstein-Friesian cattle in the State, and would hereafter make and report all transfers through the Advocate and Stockman weekly. To assist him in this work, the secretary desires us to request all owners of these cattle to furnish him with complete lists of their stock, male and female, and also to report to him promptly all purchases and sales. Mr. Myers informs us that there are at least 600 head of Holstein-Friesian cattle in the State at this time, and that the herd of Messrs. Wilcox & Leggett at Benson and Kirkhoven, is one of the largest and choicest in the country. [illegible]

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

An Address by a Graduate of the State University at the Commencement Exercises, June 1885.

Any system of traffic which directly or indirectly interferes with these three grand institutions of government, the home, the church, and the State, is in direct opposition to civilization and society. The liquor traffic is everywhere conceded to be not only a vice, but the prolific source of all vices, social and national, that effect our race. Why then should it exist? Why should it not be prohibited by law?

Is it said that our personal liberty will be interfered with? What is liberty, without law? And what is law, if it sanction the propagation of vice, misery and crime? There is in our democracy no principal more prominent than that which guarantees to government the right of self preservation.

When the war-cloud rises in the horizon the nation comes into our homes, it lays hands upon husband and son, it drags them away from friends and family, it places them in the tented field against their will and against ours. This it has a right to do for its own protection. Government just as truly has a right to shut up any shop, interfere with any industry, stop the wheels of any business, do whatever it will to protect itself from degradation and distruction, and no man can stand up and say, "my rights are interfered with." The iron bulwark of the law is set against gambling, lotteries and the sale of poisons in other forms, and why not in this?

But 'tis said, "we cannot afford to abolish a traffic from which we derive the greater part of our revenue." Overlooking the rapidly increasing expenses of jails, prisons and poorhouses, the destruction of life and property thro' which the sale of liquor costs the government ten-fold the whole amount of the revenue.

Disregarding the degradation of manhood and womanhood, the destruction of the best blood of our nation, they consider only this, comparatively, mean and paltry revenue. What argument! Sanction a traffic that annually robs the people of $1,460,000,000, that the government may derive $70,000,000 of revenue therefrom. Marvelous statesmanship!

Again we are told that this method of reform is not practiced. 'Tis never deemed practical in this world to work for truth and righteousness. From the day that that cry drove back the children of Israel to wander forty years in the wilderness to the present it has with temporary efficacy been raised against every reform of existing society.

Dispite this faithless generation (the affliction of every age) great and successful reforms have marked the progress of society and gained for mankind, greater liberty and more wide spread happiness. Who shall say that prohibition can not succeed until it has been tried and proven a failure? And so long as legislatures refuse to submit this question to the people, who shall say that the time is not ripe for such trial? Sixteen legislatures have refused to submit this question to the mass of voters. In one case (Ohio) where the majority had already expressed themselves in its favor.

Finally we are confronted by those who are fully conscious of the extent of this evil and the need of reform are waiting for public sentiment to reach that high standard at which it will be impossible for such evils to exist, a time when virtue shall triumph in society and vice and low passions shall slink away into their native darkness. When will that day come if we sit idly down and wait? Who is it? What is it that creates public sentiment? Does it create itself? Has it not always been arroused by the earnest protest of patriot and statesman? Shall we enlist public sentiment against this evil by throwing the protecting arm of license around the traffic? By giving it the sanction of law and classing it with legitimate and respectable business? This reform is not gaining ground while we by lopping off the branches add strength to the trunk and aid the root to gain a firmer hold on society. Only when we strike at the root of the evil will our efforts succeed. Then, tho' the top may seem for a time to flourish, when the roots are at length cut off, death will be sudden and sure.

Law itself is a national teacher, and tho' the impulses of a particular occasion may raise public sentiment above the standard of legal institutions, the morality of a people can not be maintained above the morality of their laws.

The voice of history bears witness that the laws of a country may reconcile public sentiment to crime in its blackest forms.

When polygamy is allowed a plurality of wives is respectable, when gambling houses are licensed that vice cannot be made disgraceful, and so long as we license this traffic a high standard of public sentiment cannot be reached.

The great hope of this reform is that it has had and still has radical advocates. These men have been called enthusiasts, agitators, fanatics, cranks. So have all great reformers, and yet their work is manifest. Tho' this movement has heretofore received no recognition, tho' it has been pushed aside again and again by political parties it has now reached a point where it can be pushed aside no longer. The hour has struck for its consideration, and it will never cease to agitate the public mind until this whole system of traffic is proscribed and dethroned.

Tho' the enemy be organized and unscrupulous, tho' untold wealth and powerful influence are arrayed against this reform, we need not despair. The light whose dawn ushers in a new and brighter morn rarely shines from palace and crown but from the manger and the cross! This movement has with it the moral forces of the race, and "before the aroused conscience of the people, wielding the indomitable will of the State, the ministers of vice, tempters of innocence, and destroyers of humanity shall go down forever!

As we look into the future with eyes enlightened with trust in divine providence by faith in human courage, fidelity and virtue, we may behold our nation, fair to-day, yet fairer by far than now, having added to her crown of virtues, the star of national sobriety, Moving down the solemn pathway of the ages, an image of just, intelligent, benficent power!"

Catalogue for 1885.

I come before my patrons and others with a new Catalogue for 1885, with an experiance of six years in this northern climate growing Nursery Stock and Small Fruits, I feel with confidence to recommend to the public most of the trees, shrubs and plants presented in this Catalogue, providing they have proper care in planting and cultivation.

PLANTING AND CULTURE.

If soil is not dry, it is best to make it so by proper drainage before planting. Deep and thorough plowing into ridges so as to plant on top of back-furrow, leaving dead furrow for surface drainage, is good. Well rotted manure spread on land where it is new, and plowed under, will help to pulverize and take out the wild grass nature from the soil.

HOW TO PREPARE TREES.

First, cut all bruised roots, in fact all large roots, an inch or an inch and one-half from the ends, with a slant cut from under side. Cut all side branches back nearly one-half; also leader part way, thus giving more sap to start roots instead of supporting such a large top at first. Do not expose the roots to the sun or drying winds. Keep them always covered or moist until planted. Oftentimes success or failure depends upon this little care given at the time of planting.

PLANTING.

On ground thoroughly plowed, holes just large enough to receive the roots of the trees straightened out nicely, will do. But if not plowed, holes dug from 1½ to 2 feet in diameter and just deep enough to set tree from one to two inches lower than it stood in the Nursery, will be sufficient. Spread roots out carefully, sift fine dirt around them, add a pail of water, raise up tree a little so that the mud will stick to the roots; let the water soak away in the earth, then fill up the hole with soil around tree and pack it firmly with the feet. Be sure and stake trees, with matting between, to prevent chaffing. It will protect the small roots from breaking during heavy winds. Protect trees on south side from sun scald with a handful of straw or hay loosely tied along body of tree, or even two pieces or board nailed together and sharpened at one end and driven in the ground a foot or so from body of tree will be a safeguard from sunscald.

All cultivation should stop in July so that trees will more thoroughly ripen their wood before winter. Prune back one-half year's growth of branches in the two last weeks of August, which will help to harden the wood, dwarf the tree and make it stand the winter better. Trees should be dwafed as such as possible, in this climate.

All trees and plants should be thoroughly cultivated while young; they become more thrifty and will yield much better and larger fruit. Young orchards can be seeded down after the fourth or fifth year from planting. Plant trees from twelve to sixteen inches apart each way.

APPLES.

The hardiest varieties and those that have succeeded best in Minnesota, are, first:

Dutchess of Oldenburg.—Large and beautiful apple, striped with deep red background; tender and juicy. Season September. This apple is of Russian origin and has stood the severities of Minnesota winters as far north, and ever farther, than Minneapolis.

Wealthy Apple.—Originated in Minnesota from seed brought from Maine. It is nearly as hardy as the Dutchess of Oldenburg; color deep red; very juicy; good bearer. Season November to January. There are several other kinds, quite hardy, but none I can feel to recommend, and even Dutchess and Wealthy are not sure in Northern Minnesota and Dakota.

Improved Siberian Apples.—I have taken much pains to examine and grow different kinds. They are much safer to plant in this climate than standard apple trees, but none have succeeded very well but Transcendent and Hislop. These have been bearing in the nursery for the past two years.

Transcendent Crab.—This is one of the very best for the climate. Large and beautiful yellow, shaded with bright red, crisp and juicy, excellent in flavor. Season September and October.

Hislop Crab.—Large, deep crimson; excellent for preserving and drying. Ripens some later than Transcendent; will keep nearly all winter.

The last two varieties have been thoroughly tested in Northern Minnesota and in Manitoba, and have proved quite successful.

PLUMS.

Of these I cannot recommend but one variety, Desoto, which will do well in favored localities.

GRAPES.

The hardiest are the Clinton and Janesville. They will grow good fruit and mature if frosts do not come too early in September.

SMALL FRUITS.

These are much safer and more satisfactory to plant in this climate than fruit trees. They will bear an abundance of fruit, with a proper care in planting and cultivation. First on the list are

CURRANTS.

There is no need of excluding varieties; all are hardy and prolific in this northern climate. Small bushes set in my Nursery, only two years old, were loaded down with fruit the following year.

Black Naples.—Similar to the old Black English, but larger and more productive, and every way better.

Cherry.—Largest of red currants. Bush short, vigorous and productive.

Prince Albert.—A new and beautiful robust plant, very stocky and even in size. Somewhat later in fruit than cherry currant; a valuable red variety.

Victoria Currant.—A stocky, large plant, vigorous in growth and one of the best red varieties.

Red Dutch Improved.—This is the earliest red variety, very prolific in fruit of medium size.

White Grape Currant.—This is the best white currant grown. Large, mild, and when fully ripe almost sweet; best for table use; an immense bearer.

I have a large stock of all of the above varieties in Nursery. All kinds have fruited and stood through our severest winters. Plant them in good soil four feet apart each way. Give thorough cultivation and you will have an abundance of fruit in a short time.

GOOSEBERRIES.

This fruit is good and quite certain of success. The best are Houghton Seedling and Downing.—Plant them four feet each way in good rich soil.

RASPBERRIES.

This variety of fruit is always satisfactory, but needs some protection from our severe winters.

Philadelphia.—Medium size, dark red, hardy and an immense bearer.

Mammoth Cluster.—The best hardy black variety. Plant them four feet apart in rows, but rows should be six feet apart so as to have plenty of room for new canes.

STRAWBERRIES.

These are among our best small fruits. I have grown them in Nursery the past five years, yielding large fine fruit and of the best quality. They should be planted on good soil thoroughly prepared, in rows four feet apart, and twenty apart in the row. The best varieties are, first,

Wilson's Albany.—An old, tried variety, very productive and large, and succeeds well on all soils.

Crescent Seedling.—One of the best new varieties, very vigorous and hardy, rich, fine flavor and heavy bearer when fertilized with the Wilson.

Sharpless Seedling.—A large, new variety, pleasant flavor, but not as heavy a bearer as the Wilson and Crescent.

ESCULENT ROOTS.

Asparagus.—Does well. I have fine two year old roots for sale.

Rhubarb.—There is nothing grown that pays better for the same labor expended than pie plant. Once thoroughly set in trenches, one foot deep, and one foot wide, first putting in bottom of trench well rotted manure, two inches in depth, fill trench up with good dirt, set roots in this four feet apar. I furnish roots two years old, sufficient in size to give stalks to use the first season, of the following kinds: I have Strawberry, Linneaus, Victoria and Mammoth.

ORNAMENTAL TREES, SHRUBS AND PLANTS.

Ashleaf Maple.—A rapid, spreading tree, has a beautiful light brown foliage; the best for street planting.

Elm, American White.—Abundant in our forests; nice for streets and lawns.

Soft Maple.—Good shade trees, quite hardy after fourth year.

European Mountain Ash.—A hardy, small-sized tree, beautiful in bloom, covered with great clusters of scarlet berreis from July until winter.

Weeping Ash.—A beautiful, hardy, drooping tree, nice for lawns.

TREE CLAIM STOCK.

I make it a specialty to grow young, thrifty trees, from Ash and Box Elder seeds, one and two years old, to sell by the thousand, for tree claims, also furnish Cottonwood and soft maple trees, White willow cuttings, for wind-breaks, and Ash and Box Elder Seed. I am prepared to fill tree claim orders at lower figures than in previous years.

EVERGREENS.

There are but few I feel to recommend. All have to be protected the first two or three years' growth.

Arborvitæ.—Valuable for hedge and screens; can be sheared to any shape.

Norway Spruce.—Nice for single trees; all kinds have to be dwarfed in this climate; keep roots moist until planted.

SHRUBS.

Lilac, White Persian and Purple.—All well-known, hardy shrubs and very fragrant bloomers.

Snowball.—Quite satisfactory; has to protected in winter.

American Ivy, or Virginia Creeper.—A rapid climber; foliage changes in autumn to purple and scarlet.

ROSES.

Queen of the Prairie.—(Climbing.) A bright rosy red, strong grower and free bloomer.

Double Michigan.—(Climbing.) Vigorous and hardy, two weeks later than Queen, blooms in large clusters, bright red.

Madam Plantier.—Pure white, showy, wonderfully free bloomer.

Harrisoni.—Yellow, quite showy, one of the hardiest roses grown.

Moss Roses.—Princess Adelaide, one of the hardiest and freest bloomers.

Perpetual Roses.—(Blooming at intervals through the season.) Ten or fifteen sorts. Quite beautiful and distinct in form and color. All roses need winter protection.

BULB AND HERBACEOUS PLANTS.

Dicentr Spectabalis. (Bleeding Heart.)—Very beautiful; one of the hardiest bulbs grown.

Pæonia Roses.—Sweet scented, bright rose color; very hardy; free bloomer.

Pæonia Whittlijii.—(Pure white.) very showy; easily cultivated, sweet scented and hardy. I also furnish a fine assortment of Lilies—Japan and Valley.

Phloxes.—Distinct in color.

Tulips.—Choice assortment, single and double.

Gladiolus.—Assorted without names.

I conclude my catalogue by saying that I have a deep interest in the trees and plants I furnish my customers. If they succeed in growing them my business increases and is more satisfactory. I have found that trees bought in autumn and carefully buried for winter do full better than those dug in Nursery in spring. Buried properly they are perfectly safe and are on hand for early spring planting. I guarantee my customers young, healthy trees and plants, in good order when delivered. The firm of Haseltine Bro's was dissolved in June, 1883. E. W. Haseltine has no interest or share in Crookston Nurseries, nor is he successor to the old firm of Haseltine Bro's as he has advertised. I still continue busines on the Old Nursery Grounds. Special inducements given on large orders coming from a number of parties in same neighborhood.

MIXED OR SPECIAL FARMING.

For the Farmers Advocate.

The question of mixed or spicial farming is so often discussed in the agricultural papers that I suppose I can say nothing new and yet I feel like adding my testimony in favor of a general mixture of industries on the farm.

A few years ago in common with many owning lands in Southwestern Minnesota, I had an idea that money could be made by wheat growing and having opened a number of farms primarily with a view to sale and which I was renting at the time, I naturall made wheat the principal crop. This was done partly because wheat was the easiest crop to handle with tenants and that the farms were not fitted up with buildings suitable for stock raising, and further that farming was considered secondary to selling the lands. The sequel proved that I could neither sell the lands at a reasonable price nor make the farms pay their way, while on the other hand they ran behind every year. There is a saying that when matters are at the worst if there is a change it must be for the better, and with this in mind in the spring of 1881 I resolved to try stock raising in connection with grain on my home farm. The purchases of 1881 comprised only a short horn bull and about forty cows and heifers. In 1882 the number was increased to seventy-five not including calves dropped by those bought the year before, and since that time, though I have bought a few head, the inrease has been mainly from the calves dropped. The total cost of stock bought has been $2,040, while the sales up to this time foot up $3,720 with 186 head on hand and some fifteen or twenty calves yet to come. The losses from disease and all causes have been very light, scarcely worth mentioning (two grown animals) up to the past spring when five died of disease and one by accident, making a total loss of eight head of animals excepting calves in four years. The plan of feeding has been to stack all the straw grown near the barn in the yards and give the cattle free access to it feeding at the same time all the hay they would eat and giving grain to calves during the winter but not as a rule feeding grain to grown animals. This is the plan at present; at the first we milked the cows and it was then necessary to feed them some grain toward spring and until the grass was sufficient for them. Now, however, the calves are kept in a pasture and the cows turned with them at night. When cows are not milked but kept only for the stock it is not best to have the calves come before May or June as it saves feed and labor, and yet the calf will make sufficient growth by fall to winter well. I have purposely avoided giving a detail or aggregate of expenses but have left that to be figured out by the farmers themselves as any one of them can tell how much it costs him to raise a calf on my plan. My practice has been to sell the best bull calves at a year old, for breeding, the prices ranging at from $20 to $40 each, while the heifers I have kept with the purpose of breeding only from grades, as soon as I have enough of them to enable me to sell all the common cows. I will say in conclusion thus far my experiment has proved successful, and that I think the new road to success is for the farmers to raise both grain and stock but to give the stock as large a place in his plans as possible. I have raised hogs as well as cattle, and done moderately well, but the number kept should be limited, and they should in all cases be given pasture in summer.

This section is adapted to both grain and stock, and he who would get a living from the land is wise if he so lays his plans as to have work the year round, instead of for six months, and to have something to sell more than once a year.

It has been said that the man who is fartherest from market is the man who has nothing to sell but this was changed in the experience of one farmer last year, who found that it was the man with a big wheat crop, that had a cost more than it would sell for. I have given you only an outline of my experience in stock and grain raising, but at a future time I hope to go more into details, particularly for the benefit of those just making a beginning.

Good Advice.

Ed. Hoard's Dairyman:

The present low prices of dairy products, unsatisfactory as they are, should not have the same disheartening influence upon the dairyman and stock grower as the like condition of things in the case of a farmer (?) who makes grain-raising a specialty. Let any one who feels blue over the present condition of dairy farming consider the situation of his Dakota brother last fall and winter; with wheat and oats selling at the same price per bushel—30c for 60 lbs. of wheat, and 30c for 33 lbs. of oats; with abundantly more wheat than oats to dispose of. The dairyman, during the past year of plenty, has, if he is true to his vocation, been enriching his land and laid by of his surplus gains enough to enable him to bridge over such a drouth as we are now experiencing; just as he each fall expects (in this latitude) a severe winter and provides liberally for all that are dependant upon him. He must be a young dairyman who has not lived through a season of depression in prices like the present. And since history is continually repeating itself a change for the better is not far off, indeed the light of better days is already dawning. In this connection I cannot resist the temptation to express my conviction in favor of mixed farming as against making a specialty of any one branch. In doing so it must be noted that there are exceptions to this, as in all other rules. There are individuals, who by their tastes, training, and surroundings must of necessity be specialists. But for the average farmer whose financial success is not already assured I cannot crowd back the belief that it is better for such to follow a more diversified system, which if followed intelligently, will in the end place them in the class where they belong. But it must be clearly understood that there can be no successful agriculture that does not have grass as its ground-work.

GUERNSEY GRADES FOR BUTTER.

I am managing a butter dairy of first quality of that article for private family and hotel use in this city, using a thoroughbred Guernsey bull on high-grade Short-horn cows; and the young cows already produced of this cross, half-bred Guernseys, have thus far proved quite satisfactory milk and butter producers, milking freely and holding out late in milk before producing their next calves. I have now growing up about twenty-five last year's heifer calves of these cows, for butter, intending to keep fifty cows in regular milk.

I have no thoroughbred Guernsey cows, being convinced that good grade Guernsey cows are as profitable for butter-making as thoroughbreds. The young cows so far have proved very kind and gentle and easily managed.

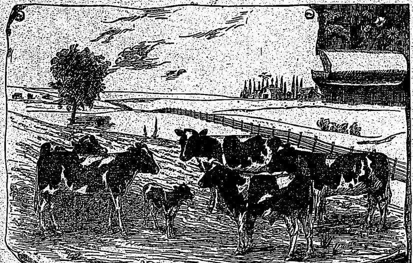
I am glad that you have established a Guernsey journal; it is much needed in our country. Although few compared with the Jerseys, their greater size over the latter adds largely to their value, being good for beef as well as milk, which the Jerseys are not.

I shall take great interest in the success of your paper. You seem to have embarked in the subject with decided zeal and success, a matter much needed in the growing importance of the butter production of the country. My confidence in the Guernsey increases with every day's experience. A young half-bred Guernsey cow brought her second calf a day or two ago, and it was impossible to dry her off before this second calf was born. You say the bulls are not vicious, but, on the contrary, are uncommonly kind in temper. I am glad you find them so, and hope my present young one will so prove. I shall slaughter my four-year-old one soon, as he is ugly. I can't trust him longer, although he has got me very fine calves. I am disposed to work a share of my Guernsey milk into butter without skimming, as they do in Guernsey, and try the experiment.—[Lewis F. Allen, Buffalo, N. Y., in Guernsey Breeders Journal.

College Holstein-Friesians.

Farmers Advocate and Stockman.

Prof. Knapp says in the Homestead that three years ago last autumn five imported heifers of this breed were purchased for the Iowa Agricultural College farm. They were selected with more than usual care from a large herd. As far as possible uniformity in color, size and milking qualities were secured. During the first year three of the heifers dropped calves, so that they could be tested for comparative value. They each gave over 8,000 pounds of milk and from lowest to highest the difference was less than 100 pounds for the year. Their calves were marked and formed very much alike, and sold at the same price. Each year since, these five cows have increased their flow of milk, and their general excellence has been admitted by all who have observed them. Jessica dropped a male calf the first week in May; on the 22d of May she gave 78 pounds of milk. At calving her udder measured six feet in circumference. To determine what good common and grade cows are doing, we secured the weights of the milk given by 40 cows which dropped calves this spring. Their average was 21 pounds per day. A few gave double this amount, others fell below. It thus appears that the average cow is giving about one-fourth the amount of milk produced by a good cow.



THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.—Rural World.

Mr. Robert Stanton informs us that the prospects of the building of a packing house are bright and that there is no doubt in his mind but that it will be ready to do business by another spring. Dr. Thomas desires to take this opportunity of thanking the public for a generous patronage in the past and to assure them that he is rapidly recovering and hopes to be again ready to serve their wants in his line about August 1st. Due and timely notice will be given of the exact date when his office will be re-opened.

Jack Bunnell and family left for their new home at Breckenridge on Saturday afternoon. They will be missed from Crookston society very much. Jack is one of the oldest (and best) engineers on the road, having [illegible] upon this road seven years. While we are sorry to see them go we congratulate the village of Breckenridge upon the acquisition, and we wish Jack all kinds of good luck in his new home.

A drive out to H. M. Pierce's farm showed us one of the finest farms in the county—or perhaps we should say one that is to be for the many improvements, have but just begun. Mr. Pierce has built a comfortable addition to the farm house, put up a good barn, chicken houses and yards, pig pens and has fenced off a sufficient tract for pasturage. He is breaking a large tract this summer and as soon as practicable will have the quarter all under the plow. In the pasture lot we found some fine grade Jersey cows and heifers, and the two thoroughbred Guernseys whose arrival was noticed in these columns a few weeks since. In the barn were some fine grade Norman mares, as fine animals as are to be found in the county. In the piggery we found three full blood Poland China pigs with a squad of grade Berkshires, all in fine and thrifty condition. (They would be better off and more thrifty if they were running in a nice grass lot.) In a small yard, fenced in with lath we saw an immense brooder in and around which were clustered from 150 to 200 young chickens—hatched by an incubator. The chickens appeared to be as healthy and thrifty as though they had come into the world in a legitimate manner. In the house we found the incubator at work on a hundred eggs. This incubator is automatic and needs but little attention to insure success. Butter is made on the creamery plan by deep setting in a patent creamery and is worked by a patent machine which does not break or mash the butter. A churn full ready for working showed that they are making excellent butter from the grade Jerseys. A large number of trees have been set out on the place and are in fine thrifty condition. Upon the whole for a lawyer's farm H. M. makes a fine showing in the start.

Terry & Collins have just received a carload of fine work horses and mules. If you intend to buy a team now is your time and you want to speak quick for they are going with a rush.

The bodies of all of the victims of the Lake Minnetonka accident have been recovered and the funeral of the Rand family—eight victims, occurs today. Minneapolis is in deep mourning.

We learn that Dave Williams has accepted the position of yardmaster of the St. P. & D. R. R., with headquarters at Duluth, and will go in about two weeks. We are sorry to lose Dave from this road, but rejoice in his better prospects.

Tom Harris has moved the Christianson drug store and Berg & Olson jewelry shop to photographer Johnson's lot, further down on Robert St. Johnson's photograph gallery building is moved back on the lot to make room for the new business.

Efforts are being made to secure a concert by the Clara Louise Kellogg Concert Co. This can be accomplished if 150 seats at $1.50 can be sold. A treat of this kind rarely happens in this upper country and it should not be a difficult matter to raise the required amount.

Last winter Mr. C. H. Saake came to the city and opened a small jewelry shop on Second St. As soon as he became generally known his business began to grow until he was obliged to come down on Main St., and open out a fine establishment which is growing to that degree that he already finds his quarters limited. See his new announcement elsewhere.

Geo. Crocker and A. C. Rhinehart were in from St. Hilaire on Wednesday and from them we learn that the black cloud which of late threatened to bust up their saw-mill business does indicate much of a shower after all. It seems that after they had bought their timber of the Government agent, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, an agent was sent on to look into the matter to see if there might be a green [illegible] in the outfit. This agent seized the whole business, together with the logs belonging to other parties. Messrs. Crocker, Rhinehart et al. interested in the St. Hilaire mills have given bonds and will go ahead with their sawing business. The matter will doubtless be adjusted to the entire satisfaction of all the parties in interest.

The Farmers' Relief Committee.

Gen. J. H. Baker, Gen. Becker and S. S. Murdock, comprising the farmers' relief committee, went up to St. Hilaire last Thursday in a private coach. They had on board a plenty of the good things of this life—lunches, cigars and cards, and one need not go thirsty if one cared to drink. The farmers, doubtless, all felt relieved by this visitation, and the commissioners seemed to have a good time. About 100 farmers met the party on the farm of W. Wylie, on Black River, where they hope to secure a side track, and the commissioners listened to their statements and will probably make a report recommending the railroad to put in the side track. Gen. Baker expressed much pleasure in seeing so many good cows in Polk County.

A Sample Brick.

On Monday Mr. J. F. Brown brought the JOURNAL a sample of the cheese he is making at his factory at Fertile and wished us to sample and tell what we think of it. Having duly sampled we are prepared to say that it is the finest flavored cheese we ever tasted in this Valley, and proves conclusively to us that it is now no longer necessary to send outside for our cheese. No better cheese can be made anywhere than Mr. Brown brought us, and if he can do that every time he certainly ought to find a sufficient market for all he can make. It is no skim milk affair but full cream, rich, delicate and fine. To all lovers of good cheese we can recommend Brown's cheese.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication July 16th, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of seven hundred and seventy-two and 80-100 dollars, ($772.80-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Louis A. Genereux, unmarried, to Lauretta M. Boies, bearing date the 11th day of March A. D. 1881, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1881, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 44 and 47, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $700 bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 11th day of March 1880, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that past due interest thereon should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date said interest became due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1885, and the interest now due on said interest the mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-nine (29,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of August, A. A Fatal Accident.

A fearful accident occurred on Lake Minnetonka on Sunday last by which ten persons lost their lives. A party, consisting of the Hon. A. C. Rand, ex-mayor of Minneapolis, Mrs. A. C. Rand, three children, Miss Mary Rand, aged 16, Harvey Rand, aged 13, Frank Rand aged 10, son of A. B. Rand, Mr. J. R. Coykendall, of Coykendall Bros., Mrs. J. R. Coykendall, their daughter Katie, aged 4 years, Robert Hussey, aged 12, son of W. B. Hussey, of Minneapolis, and Geo. McDonald, engineer of the Minnie Cook were out on the lake when a storm arose and before they could make a landing the boat, a small steam yacht, was swamped and all on board perished. The bodies of Mrs. Rand and engineer McDonald were recovered before dark on Sunday. This sad affair has cast a gloom over the city of Minneapolis where the parties were prominent members of society.

THE EXTRA SESSION.

So far as The Journal's observation goes there is absolutely no general State demand for an extra session of the legislature. Even the re-apportionment of the legislative representation does not attract great attention, and since it is true that that result can be attained only at the risk of unfortunate general legislation, the verdict of the people is that they will wait. The extra session is not wanted. Drop it.

The above from the Minneapolis Evening Journal is a fair sample of how the Minneapolis and St. Paul papers view the proposition of an extra session. Those two cities seem to think that as long as the State remains as it is—with one-half its area practically disfranchised, they can and will hold the balance of power hence they can see no need for an extra session of the Legislature. It strikes us as a very narrow view to take of the matter. The need of re-districting for this new Northwest is apparent to every one conversant with the fact that for several years we must remain without proper representation unless an extra session is had is sufficient to warrant an extra session. St. Paul and Minneapolis realize the importance of the New Northwest in the upbuilding of those cities yet when a question of vast importance to us like this arises they both with might and main oppose it. Is this just or fair? Last year our interests demanded an extra session and St. Paul and Minneapolis opposed it. Again our interests demand attention and their attitude is practically the same. The Northwest is all well enough to them to make money out of but when it comes to giving us any help it is not essential! An extra session is wanted all the same and if Governor Hubbard is what he has pretended to be—a friend of the people he will not be run by a few politicians who wish to retain the balance of power for selfish political ends but he will grant this reasonable request and convene the Legislature.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

By the Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior, prepared and reported semi-monthly for the Polk County Journal by Archibald Young, Attorney at Law and late Examiner of Mining, Railroad, Homestead, Pre-emption and other contest cases in General Land Office. Office 637 F. St., Washington, D. C.

PRACTICE.

Motions for review by Secretary and applications under rules 83 and 84, must be filed with the Commissioner. (New rule, No. 115.)

TIMBER CULTURE.

As claimant's good faith is evidenced by the breaking and planting, the contest is dismissed notwithstanding the requisite number of trees were not growing on the land. Depositions taken under rules 23 and 24 should be expunged from the record by R. and R. where a copy of the interrogations were not served on the opposite party. (Hartman vs. Lea, Acting Sec'y, June 10th, 1885.)

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Patent for the Maxwell grant in New Mexico having been improvidently issued by Commissioner Williamson for more than eleven square leagues of land for each of the two claimants, in contravention to the decisions of Secretaries Cox and Delano in the case, suit is recommenced to vacate said patent. (Com'r to Sec'y, June 10, 1885.)

SURVEYS.

Under the deposit system are permissive not mandatory and applications for the same must be made by a sufficient number of settlers in a township to make the survey a matter of public advantage, and of lands adapted and needed for homestead or pre-emption settlement. (Com'r to Surveyor General of New Mexico, June 6th, 1885.)

RAILROADS.

Lands within the granted limits of one company are not subject to selection as indemnity for another company. (Exparte, Logwood, Com'r, July 1st, 1885.)

STATE INDEMNITY SCHOOL SELECTIONS.

Selection defective in part is invalid as a whole and must not be placed of record. Double minimum land cannot be taken in lieu of single minimum deficiences, even at the rate of one acre for two. (California School Selections, Com'r, July 9, 1885.)

Remarkable Milkers.

The Country Gentleman, in a report of a visit to the Holstein herd of Smiths, Powell & Lamb, Syracuse, N. Y., says:

Among the individual animals which we examined was the cow Aegis, now eleven years old, and from her ample size and capacious udder, no one could hesitate to receive the statement that she had yielded in a day not less than 88 pounds 5 ounces of milk, and had made in a week 19 pounds 10 ounces of butter. She has given 16,823 pounds of milk in a year, and before dropping her last calf weighed 1,945 pounds. The quantity she gives requires milking four times in twenty-four hours. The cow Aaggie, also eleven years old, is noted for being the first cow that gave 18,000 pounds of milk in a year, and 84 lbs. 12 ounces in a day. Aaggie Ross has a high record, and at her present rate, her year, which ends on July 7, will exceed 20,000 pounds of milk, or 10 tons! In the same field we saw three cows which had exceeded 19,000 pounds each. A two-year-old, for which $2,400 was paid when she was eight months old, came from a dam which made 99 pounds 7 ounces of butter in 80 consecutive days, winning, as we are informed, the silver cup from the Jersey cow Mary Anne of St. Lambert. We saw a large number of two-year-old heifers, thirty-five of which had averaged 44 pounds of milk in a day, and sixteen of them averaged 50 pounds.

Western Rural.

The difference between well-bred stock and the scrub is so marked that we often wonder why farmers will persist in raising and feeding stock which does not give the best returns for the feed consumed, and which when placed on the market is sure to be sold at a discount. The difference in the prices commanded by the two classes of stock should open the eyes of the intelligent farmer of the importance of keeping none but improved animals. In these close times, when the range of profits in every business is very small, the importance of making a change for the class of animals which will pay the greatest returns in growth and in prices which they will command must impress itself on the minds of all thinking men.

Likes the Holsteins.

Hoard's Dairyman.

M. James F. Babcock, a breeder of Holsteins at New Hampton, in a business letter, writes us as follows:

"The Holsteins are the cattle for me, for the dairy and general purpose stock, I have a heifer which calved at thirteen months old, and she is doing finely. I have also a half bred heifer two years old with first calf that gave 38 pounds of milk a day for a week. I made 9¼ lbs. of butter from the cream of a half bred heifer 21 months old in one week. I have not tested the heifer that gave the 38 pounds a day, but it is rich milk and I am confident would test 10 pounds of butter per week. I am milking 32 cows and don't get time to test. Yours,

JAMES E. BABCOCK."

We think friend Babcock can well afford to take a little time to get better acquainted with his cows through a test of their capacity. It costs too much not to know the cows.

Testing Cows.

H. B. Gurler, before Ill. Dairyman's Association.

I commenced to test my individual cows for percentage of cream and weight of milk. I found the weight of milk to range from 18 to 40 pounds, and the percentage of cream to vary from seven to twenty in the different cows. I afterward got an idea that this test was not sufficiently accurate, then I tested all my cows (forty in number) at this time by setting the milk separate and skimming and churning separate. In this test I learned that I had a cow that would pay for the food consumed, and that I had others that would pay a profit of $60 per year, after paying for feed. Up to this time I had worked from necessity, I felt that I must know the good from my poor cows, but from this time on I took much pleasure in this work. I learned that the cow that gave forty pounds of milk per day did not produce as much butter as the one that gave 18 pounds of milk. I commenced to weed out my unprofitable cows, and filled their places with better ones or with heifers from my best cows, I think it very important that a dairyman should know his best cows and raise the heifer calves from them. During this time I changed from summer to winter dairying. By a few years of this work I increased the butter yield of my dairy from 150 to 225 pounds per cow, and increased the profit above cost of feed from $15 to $45 per cow. I believe any dairyman that will commence this work will get interested in it, and he will think better of his business and better of himself.

I found winter dairying more profitable than summer dairying. I would have the cows calve in September or October. Let me say here that this work has outgrown my wife and the dog, and forced myself and a horse, and finally a steam engine into service, the dairy having increased to over sixty cows.

FARM NOTES

From the Nor'-west Farmer.

"Born and raised on a farm." Any boy should thank God for being so fortunate as to be born and raised on a farm. There is no place on this green earth so well adapted to perfectly develop mind, muscle and manhood, as a farm; there a boy has the purest air, the freshest and healthiest food, plenty of unrestricted exercise, the brightest sunshine and the soundest sleep, the very conditions necessary for the highest development. Nine-tenths of the men who have made their mark in any business, profession or pursuit have been born and raised on a farm; this is not so much because there is better blood on the farm as because the surroundings of farm life are better calculated to call out what there is in a boy and develop a full grown, healthy, perfect, self-reliant man.

A WORD TO THE BOYS.

Ashamed to work, boys?—Good, hard, honest work? Then I am ashamed of you—ashamed that you know so little about great men. Open your old Roman history now, and read of Cincinnatus. On the day on which they wanted to make him dictator, where did they find him? In the field ploughing. What about Marcus Curius, who drove Pyrrhus out of Italy? Look him up; you will find him busy on his little farm. The great Cato; you have surely heard of him—how he rose to all the honors of the Roman State; yet he was often seen at work in the field with his slaves. Scipio Africanus, who conquered Hannibal and won Carthage for Rome, was not ashamed to labor on his farm. Lucretia, one of the noblest of Roman matrons, might have been seen many a day at work spinning among her maidens. Better even than the example of noble Romans is the advice of the wise man: "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Better than this even are the beautiful New Testament words: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord!" After hearing of these instances you will surely be ashamed not to work.

In Denmark there is hardly a farmer who is not a member of an agricultural society, and agricultural societies in that and other northern countries of Europe are almost fatherly in their care of the farmers. Especially is great attention paid to butter-making, and the efforts of the society are being constantly directed towards educating every farmer, and every farmer's wife, and son and daughter in the best methods. The result is that their butter is of extra good quality and commands the highest price in the market. Holland at one time had the name of producing the best butter in the world but owing to the neglect of education its butter is now of the worst.

Improve the farm and improve the flocks and herds with equal care. Let no means of higher cultivation of the land and the securing of abundant crops be untried. Let no method, means or system of improving the farm animals go without earnest consideration as to the propriety of adopting it, if it really prove to be an improvement. Crops big in quantity and of the highest quality should ever be the former's ambition. Stock of the most rapid maturity and greatest size compatible with quality only should be tolerated on the farm. The farmer who has no ambition to constantly advancing in his business may be satisfied with a poor farm, poor crops and scrub stock; but the progressive farmer should be satisfied with aiming at nothing less than the best.

Prohibition a National Question.

BY GEORGE R. SCOTT.

Almost every man claiming respectability, will admit that prohibition is a local question; almost every other man will tell you it is a State issue, and one in a hundred will say, without a doubt, it is a national question.

What are you going to to with the ninty-nine? Show them their error, if possible. Now, gentlemen of the ninty-nine brigade, what do you think of my first reason? Here it is:

If you have any doubt that it is not a matter of regulation by the National Government, go into a town and start the business of selling liquor with a State but without a Government license, and you will soon find out (while quietly meditating in jail) that the United States authorities believe it something more than a local matter. I have put it in this way to show you instantly the correctness of the position taken by the prohibitionists. Guess I have got you cornered;—what do you think?

Now I want to tell you something else that may be new, although it is a very old fact.

In 1777 (don't forget the date) the first Continental Congress met in Philadelphia, and on the 27th day of February, in that year, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the several Legislatures in the United States immediately to pass laws the most effectual for putting an immediate stop to the pernicious practice of distilling grain, by which the most extensive evils are likely to be derived, if not quickly prevented.

What was Congress instituted for? If I am not mistaken it was formed for the purpose of assembling together delegates elected by the sovereigns of the several States to "determine questions and concert measures of common interest."

Last fall it was my pleasure to run as the prohibition candidate for Congress in the Fifth District of this State. Perhaps you heard I did not get elected. Do you know why? My answer is, the people did not believe I represented a National issue. Yet the very principle that I asked them to send me to Congress as an advocate of was considered as far back as 1777 entitled to the respect and votes of the majority of the members of that intelligent and able body of men. That was a prohibition Congress. Perhaps you ask, "What did the passage of the resolution amount to?" Not much; for the Federal party was then in power; but if a prohibition party had at that time been in full blast the historian would have had a different story to tell.

Mr. St. John has made the assertion that Uncle Sam is the boss saloonist, and he is right. If I were a cartoonist I would draw a picture of the well known Uncle Sam, filling his striped pantaloons with thousands of little bags, each marked: "Ninety cents—The price (per gallon) received, as payment for permitting the ruin of American citizens!" And on his broad-brimmed hat painted "What are you going to do about it?"

Only a local issue! What a farce! Go where you will—east, west, north or south—and you will find the existence of this evil. Its local in the sense that it curses every locality in this country.

A school teacher once told me to hold out my hand, and down came the ruler. It struck only on one spot. But its effects were not altogether local, for it doubled up my whole body. Local at first, but the pain spread almost instantly—made my mouth open, the tears flow, and a general queer feeling took possession of feet, hands and body.

The use of liquor being a national curse, it will require a combined national effort to put it down. The Government must get out of the liquor business, and raise all the revenue necessary without the aid of blood-money.

When Congress meets again let it follow the example of the first that ever met in this country, and resolve to do what it can to stop "distilling grain." Improvement in this matter is of more importance than the aid of Congress in cleaning out the beds of rivers that the oldest inhabitants has never seen navigated by a schooner.

Cedarburg News:

Six years ago lots of those weak in faith yielded to the depression, sold out good cows to discerning dairymen, at $12 and $14 per head, and that too after they had spoiled their pastures for reaping a good hay crop, and in September with no cows, the little money they sold for gone for other uses, they had the humiliating thought to encounter that they had made asses of themselves when they saw their more believing neighbors raking in the money derived from the sale of cheese that bounded from 4½ and 5 cents to 9, 10, and finally 13 cents. We distinctly remember we sold that year early summer cheese at 4½ cents, and the same fall sold November and December cheese for 13 cents in Chicago.

Notwithstanding times are somewhat slack, Seely's [illegible] still keeps up with the times. The choicest summer drinks always on hand, a nice bowl of soup for lunch, and the best lemonade in the city always on deck. Call and see me, boys. Remember Seely's place, the cosiest little place northwest of Chicago. [11-tf]

HOLSTEIN-FRIESIAN.

From the Prairie Farmer.

Holstein-Friesian cattle have risen very rapidly of late years in the estimation of the public. In some measure this is due to the efforts of breeders and other admirers of the race to make known the merits of their favorites; but still more largely to the fact that the performances of some of these cattle, as milk and as butter producers have convinced the general public of their great superiority as dairy stock Some of the records of yields of milk have seemed, to these not well acquainted with the race, to be little less than marvellous. Previous to the beginning of the year 1883, the greatest yield of milk in a single year was that of the Holstein cow Echo. It was 18,120¼ pounds; but in the year named no less than six cows of this breed surpassed that record, and the standard was raised to 23,775¼ pounds, with Echo still in advance of all other cows. Several two-year-old heifers have given more than 50 pounds of milk in one day; some have given 60 pounds; and two gave over 70 pounds, one heifer, Aaggie Constance 2,629 having won a record of 76 pounds 6 ounces of milk in a single day. A goodly number of mature cows have given over 90 pounds per day, Ethelka gave 101 pounds, and Jamaica 112 pounds 2 ounces per day......As butter-makers, these cows stand on a par with the best in the world. Many cows of this race have made over 20 pounds per week; several over 30 pounds, and five more than 90 pounds of butter in thirty days......While they are justly considered as unequalled as milk and as butter producers, they are not by any means unworthy of high esteem as producers of beef. As illustrating the rapidity of their increase in weight, the fact may be mentioned that the bull Cuba 3418, weighed 1,550 pounds recently, though he will not be two years old until next October. His sire, Neptune weighed 1,820 pounds when he was two years old; and his sire, Jacob 2d, when three years old, weighed 2,700 pounds.....In color the Holstein-Friesians are pied, or black and white. They are large of frame, with a great development of the hind quarters, giving plenty of room for the milk secreting organs and receptacles. They are reasonably hardy, but require a fair supply of food and attention to help them keep up their remarkable production of milk and butter. It is not claimed for them that they can thrive and pay their owners well if half starved or wholly neglected.

Agricultural Reports.

From the St. Paul Globe.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Some adverse criticisms of the government's agricultural reports has called forth a statement from Prof. J. R. Dodge, the statistican of the agricultural bureau. He says, in part: It is not the province of an official statistical service either to advance or depress prices, but to tell the truth. It is repeatedly reported that misrepresentation of crop production insures only the advantage of the the speculator or wealthy purchaser. Honesty, then, is the best policy for farmers in crop reporting. With reference to the wheat reports of this department there is some dissatisfaction extremists. There always is. Either they do not want the truth or they cannot see it when materialized. The charge of a reduction of one-half in our indications from April to June by is a looseness of statement which has no foundation in fact. The first report of winter wheat made on the 1st of April, before growth had commenced, on a part of the area, and when several States were covered in part by snow, indicated a probable reduction of 93,000,000 bushels as compared with the previous crop. This was the lowest estimate ever made in April. It voiced the opinions of the farmers of the apparent status of the crop at that date, but it is said, further, the real status of the crop will be better shown a month hence, when the vitality of the roots has been demonstrated and the character of the spring determined. On the 1st of May, after an unfavorable April, when the plant had to show the real injury by freezing, the indications pointed to a crop of 240,000,000 bushels, a reduction of 28,000,000 only. On the 1st of June the returns showed that the discouraged farmers plowed up millions of acres of damaged grain in the hope of a more profitable crop of corn, oats or other grain, thus reducing the prospects again, for much of this area would have brought a partial crop. The June returns showed a promise of 207,000,000 bushels, a reduction of 56,000,000 bushels from the April prospect which was fully justified by the fuller revelation of winter inquiries, the bad weather of April and May and the substitution of other crops on an immense area of injured wheat. It is a reduction of 149,000,000 from the winter wheat record of 1883, or almost 42 per cent., of which over 26 per cent. was reported on the 1st of April. Less than 16 per cent. of this reduction is the difference between April and June due to the substitution of other crops for half destroyed acreage and a plainer demonstration of the half concealed injury to the roots at this date of the 1st of April, in more Northern latitudes. It is a fair, just and reasonable difference, which proves the inaccuracy of judgment of our observers and puts to shame the efforts for distortion and representation indulged by ignorance and speculative greed. Before dismissing this subject it may be well to say for the information of all honest inquirers as to extent and efficiency of the department system, that it includes more than 2,000 boards of observers, in as many counties, farmers of experience of judgment, representative men of public spirit and promoters of intelligent agriculture in their neighborhoods, and not stipendiaries clamoring for a pittance of official popularity.

Farmers Should be Aspiring.

From the American Rural Home.

Are farmers contented? We fear not; they should be. They embrace the largest class of our population and hold the largest amount of real estate, so they particularly attract the attention of the intelligent traveler. We admit that farming is not so alluring as the bankers, manufacturers, railroad and many other kinds of business and the intelligent or ambitious young men are not attracted to the calling so readily, but when business becomes depressed, manufacturing establishments, bankers and merchants are compelled to close their doors and the mechanic finds but little demand for his labor, then the farmer, with granary full, and with herds of cattle, and sheep and swine, should feel contented with a modest income.

Farmers should be thoroughly educated, and in order to do that there must be combination. He should not be an idiot, but an intelligent man, understanding the processes of nature. Agriculture is an art and a science, and the discovery of chemistry, geology and the kindred sciences are changing the entire aspect of the agricultural world.

Chemistry and geology is to the farmer what chemistry and anatomy is to the medical student. The farmer with chemistry and geology before him is enabled to probe into the bowels of mother earth, and in her everlasting hills, and beside her babbling brooks, and deep down where old ocean's embrace conceals countless tracks of the ages, writing for the hammer and pick of some young man to push aside the rocks and let in the light of our century on the records of the past. The world never offered in any age so much to stir the energy and ambition of the young man as it does to-day.

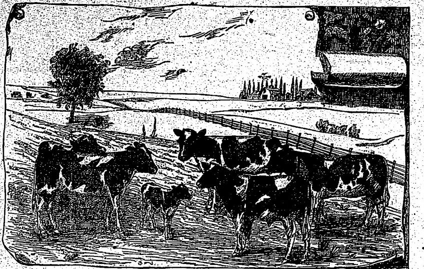
It is often said that the trades and professions are crowded already, and by simply counting poles it looks to be true, but in reality much of it is debris that soon lodges with the driftwood among the willows along the banks of life's busy current, while away out on the bosom where men do gather and measure strength, there is always room. Yes, room, though it may be closed to the timid and indolent, but ever open to the patient and industrious young man.

If we would claim a place in the world's busy life, where honor and emoluments are dispensed, it is but right that the world demand of us that we come with our minds trained to grapple with the living issues of an active age rather than encumbered with the cast-off isms and rubbish of the plodding times of our fathers.

Practically the human family are no longer separated, but like a multitude of bees in a common hive, each doing its individual labor in easy call of the rest, and every one neighbor to the world. There is something of inspiration in the thought that the man of the future is to act his part in no narrow valley, hidden by mountains, nor in the city obscure by the smoke and din of its industy, but out on the broad theater of life. Our coming young men may make themselves famous in the presence of millions, and their excellence be recorded in all of the dialects—of each, and he who enters the race for the attractive things which this age offers, must himself be, like the athletes in olden games, trained to use his mind.

Brother farmers! have we no higher ambition for our sons and daughters than to raise them up as hewers of wood and drawers of water? If we have higher, let us come together with our co-operating powers, and let our highest ambition and our warmest aspirations be to educate them and raise them higher in the scale of intelligence.

Bradley, Ark. J. T. RHINE.



THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

ROUND HOME.

Clara Louise Kellogg, Coming July 29th, 1885.

The bridge to Sampson's Addition went out with the freshet.

The electric lights are taking a rest while the river is on a high.

Mr. Bates, the Carman lumberman, is sinking an artesian well.

The new P. & H. elevator is much larger than was the old one.

M. R. Brown is getting the old Merchant's Hotel fixed up in fine shape.

E. D. Childs & Co. are sinking an artesian well in their barn yard at Carman.

Holsteins, having the most white upon their bodies are said to be the deepest milkers.

M. R. Brown has just received a car load of good work horses. For sal e a prices to suit the times.

Mr. G. H. Pollard received a severe injury at the mill last week which crippled his left arm for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Walsh returned from their eastern trip on Friday last. Mr. Walsh reports a big time at Portland at the reunion.

Chas. E. Sawyer, cashier of the First National Bank, has returned from his visit below last week. He says they are having very hot weather below.

The school buildings are receiving a coat of liquid paint. Messrs. Terryll & Miller have been working every minute but find it impossible to keep up with their orders.

County Commissioner Schmidt reports that most of the water comes in from the Clearwater River, the Red Lake River above the junction being at about its usual stage.

The county board has been in session this week as a board of equalization. It will doubtless finish its labors to-day as our citizens seem to be well satisfied with the assessments as made and corrected.

Reports from different portions of the county indicate too much rain. If, however, the "wet spell" is succeeded by fair weather the damage will not be irretrievable. No great damage by hail has been reported.

It is reported that J. R. Clements contemplates putting up a large three-story hotel by adding one more story to the brick block on Second and Broadway and filling in the space between it and the Commercial. This would make a grand hotel.

Grand Forks pretends that she don't want any Walker mills, but we notice that she eagerly offers to saw all of his logs that may escape from the big jam. Kind, but a little too previous. Those logs are all destined to be sawed in Crookston, we are happy to say.

It is reported that the affairs of the Red Lake Falls Milling and Lumber Company are about to be adjusted so as to allow business to be resumed at the Falls. This is gratifying intelligence, as this industry is a very important one to the business interests of the county. We trust the rumor will be verified.

Mr. G. H. Pollard informs The Journal that the report that his wife took a dose of laudanum with suicidal intent was incorrect. She has been taking laudanum as a medicine and took an overdose by mistake. She was not sick "nigh unto death all night" as was reported, and did not "repent of the rash act," as there was no rash act about it. We gladly correct the error.

If our farmer friends all over the county would drop us a postal card stating the condition of crops the result would be a deal of useful information that would prove greatly beneficial to their interests. State the EXACT FACTS as they exist, plainly and briefly, with all damages that have been done by rain or hail, with the condition of the crops, prospects, &c. All are cordially invited to respond.

Since our last issue the river has been booming and for a time much apprehension existed least the booms should break and let out the logs. A big jam occurred at the island above the boom and at the boom, but the island relieved the boom of most of the strain thus, doubtless, saving a break. Millions of feet of logs are packed into a space of less than a quarter of a mile in length of the river and the sight is a grand one. The danger is now all past.

Stone & Pinkerton are doing a rushing business in machinery of all kinds. It keeps them on the jump to keep up with orders and their large corps of efficient men are busy every hour. On Tuesday they had a trial of a gang plow of three plows on Sec. 12, in Andover, but owing to the fact that the plow was new and did not scour readily in the wet soil, it was not possible to get the plow to work perfectly satisfactory. They put the business into prairie sod to scour it, and the way it tore up the prairie was a caution. After going a few rounds thus, they put it back on stubble land, but it was not sufficiently scoured up yet. However, it demonstrated the fact that it could do excellent work when properly scoured. Another trial will be had as soon as the plow is put in proper condition. The plow is the "Hapgood," and from what we could learn of it we should say that it is a good one.

Brick for Felix Fournet's new block are being delivered.

The prospects for a drouth are good. No rain for 24 hours!

The total valuation of personal property as returned by the assessors, in 1884, was $1,626,149; in 1885, $1,592,511.

Only a few more weeks until the harvest, but what a world of anxiety are crowded into those few weeks!

Considerable uneasiness existed least the log jam should break and sweep things promiscously. All danger in that direction seems at an end for the present.

It is the general opinion that war in Europe is inevitable. The Russians seem bound to kick up a muss anyhow. Well, if they have got to fight they can't get at it too quick.

We learn that R. B. Gates has the contract for building the Episcopal parsonage. It will be a fine building. The foundations are ready for the superstructure.

Frank Durwin was severely injured at the mill on Saturday. His clothing was nearly stripped from his body and he sustained severe flesh wounds that will lay him up for several weeks doubtless. Dr. Van Dyke, assisted by W. L. Sargeant dressed his wounds and put him in ship shape when he was taken to his home on the avenue.

Mr. M. P. Losey, was in from Euclid, on Monday making arrangments for the grand opening of the Keystone House, at Euclid, which event takes place on Friday evening next. He will spare no pains nor expense to render the affair an enjoyable one and he knows how to get up a good ball. He reports some little damage from hail north of Euclid but not as serious as it has been sometimes. Crop prospects are good.

THE KELLOGG CONCERT.

The Clara Louise Kellogg Concert Company gave a concert at Market hall last evening of rare excellence. This lady has gathered around her a number of superior vocal and instrumental performers, capable of interpreting, in a proper manner, the works of the best composers. The program consisted of thirteen numbers and the large audience was so enthusiastic and felt so kindly towards the great artist that heads the company that it encored ten of the selections, thus nearly doubling the program, which included selections from such composers as Liszt, Flotow, Blumenthal, David, Gounod, Verdi, Gottschalk and De Beriot. Mrs. Laura S. Groves has a sweet, pleasant contralto voice, and in her first number established herself firmly in the favor of the audience. Miss Torbett, though young, has a wonderful command over the violin, and produces a remarkably pure and delicate tone. Mr. Mockridge has a very pleasant tenor voice, but in some way his Salve Dimora did not give full satisfaction. Mr. Morawski has a good, clear base voice which he handles perfectly. His "Deep down within the Cellar" was delightfully rendered, the low tones being reached without effort. Of course Miss Kellogg was the point of great attraction, and whenever she appeared she received an ovation. The greatest selection of the evening was the quartet, from Rigoletto by Verdi, rendered by Miss Kellogg, Miss Groves, Messrs. Mockridge and Morawski. This brought a storm of applause and had to be repeated.—[St. Paul Globe.

This celebrated company will appear at the Opera House in this city on Wednesday evening, July 29th. Tickets now on sale at the Opera House box office. Secure seats early and avoid the rush.

INCREASE OF STOCK.

The following table, copied from assessor's reports, shows a gratifying increase of stock in Polk County:

	1884.	1885.	Inc.
No. Horses, all ages,	6,842.	7,927.	1,085
" Cattle, all ages	11,276.	14,280.	3,004
" Sheep	1,592.	2,068.	476
" Hogs	3,023.	5,821.	2,859

It will be noticed that the greatest increase is in the department of cattle and hogs, as it should be. When we consider that no account is taken of colts, calves and pigs born this year, we may have some approximate idea of the real increase. As to hogs an estimated increase of four to one would not be far out of the way, which would give a total of 12,088 hogs and pigs in the county, over one-half hog to every inhabitant in the county, making an amount to be killed sufficient to supply the needs of the county for next year at least. We predict that the increase in the various departments next year will make a showing that will open the eyes of the oldest inhabitant. When we consider the quality of the stock from which this increase springs, some little idea of its value to the county may be derived. That Polk County will soon become one of the greatest stock counties in the State there can be no doubt.

GRAND OPENING.

The Keystone House, at Euclid, will be opened to the public on Friday evening, July 24th 1885, with a grand ball so which all are cordially invited. Drop in and see us.

"One More Unfortunate."

C. W. Dix' head has falled into the waste basket. S. N. Horneck, one of the faithful, takes his place as postmaster at Detroit, Minn. And so it goes "One by one the roses fall!"

The Minneapolis Journal still continues to say of the extra session question "drop it!" It claims that it has made a careful search of the State papers and can find no expresions in favor of an extra session hence it concludes that the wishes of the people are against one. It quietly ignores the fact that the papers in over one-half of the area of the State are unanimous in the demand for an extra session hence we can but infer that the Journal does not consider that the Northwest amounts to much anyhow. It seems to think that because the south part seems content with the present jug-handled political position that it is all right that it should continue so eight or ten years longer. With all its enterprise it does not seem to realize that this great Northwest has grown within the past few years almost beyond precedent and that its interests imperatively demand an extra session. The Journal can learn something if it will take the pains to investigate this matter a little.

The Farmers' Advocate and Northwestern Stockman, (why could they not have found a long name somewhere?) is the name of a new agricultural paper, published at St. Paul and edited by H. A. Castle, formerly of the Dispatch. It is claimed by some that it is started purely for political purposes, but we have examined it closely for several weeks and haven't caught it at it. We have found, however, a very readable agricultural paper, and if it holds to its present policy we believe there is a field of usefulness for it to fill and that it will fill it. Agriculture is the most important industry in our State—the basis of our past prosperity, as it must be of our future to a large extent, and while other interests have been boomed out of all proportion the most important of all has been almost entirely neglected. It is true we have had one or two so-called "agricultural papers" in this State, but until the Farm, Stock and Home was established last winter no great amount of attention or capital was devoted to the great subject, and now comes the Farmers' Advocate with evidence of money and brains to back it up. The field is wide enough and we wish the Advocate its full measure of success.

Do not be afraid of overdoing the stock business. There is always room on top in any trade or profession and this is especially so in this business. While there is a great possibility of overdoing the matter in producing scrub stock, there is no danger whatever of overdoing in the breeding of thoroughbred stock and the manufacture of a gilt-edged article of butter and cheese. The trouble has been in the production of stock that will barely pay the cost of production. Clear-headed men are realizing this and the demand for thoroughbred stock that will pay a reasonable profit is increasing and will continue to grow, making the breeding of good stock a profitable business. The prices for scrub stock for beef and the tons and tons of grease (called butter) annually produced prove this beyond a doubt, while choice animals and choice butter and cheese will always command a fair living price in the markets of the world. There is always a demand for the best, and this fact will tend to crowd the poorest to the wall. No man need be afraid to go into stock judiciously if he is a man possessing an ordinary amount of brains necessary to success. In all farming operations men should strive to produce nothing but the best of everything, and then we shall hear no more about this overproduction business. No man, however, should stock his farm to its utmost in this country, but with a reasonable number of cows that will make 200 lbs. of butter each, a few good colts every year, a few hogs and a few sheep, a good profit can be realized each year and the presence of this stock on the farm will enable him to raise as much wheat on one acre as he has heretofore raised on two and three, making the grain he raises all clear profit. Some have expressed the fear that Polk County will overdo in the matter of stock-raising, but there is no danger as yet as long as she continues to do as she is doing—get the BEST KINDS. Our prospects were never better than now and the cow—the GOOD COW, is doing it. Let the good work continue.

TO TRY LOUIS RIEL.

Preparations to have Dumont and Dumais at Regina as Witnesses—An Interview with Riel.

REGINA, N. W. T., Special Telegram to Pioneer Press, July 19.—Negotiations have been inaugurated by Riel's counsel to have Gabriel Dumont and Dumais brought here from Montana to give evidence in behalf of Riel. They will be guaranteed the protection of the court during their stay in the territories, and Dumont expresses a willingness to come. Riel's counsel express an intention to push forward Riel's trial, and intimate that it will last but one week. A large number of half-breed witnesses for the defense have arrived from Batoche. Gen. Middleton is here and will be one of the first witnesses examined. Indignation of the Catholics is aroused against Riel because of his refusal to attend mass celebrated at the barracks this morning by Father Dugas of St. Boniface.

RIEL AND HIS COUNSEL.

Regina Special, 10th: Lemieux Greenshields and Fitzpatrick reached here at 3 o'clock in the morning, during a drenching rain. The eminent counsel have lost no time, and at an early hour yesterday visited Riel. The latter was almost overcome when they entered, and in a voice choked with emotion expressed his gratitude for the generosity and unforgetfulness of his friends in the East. He said it was pleasant to observe that each gentleman was of a representative nationality, and declared that he was no longer dubious of the result of the trial. In adjourning to another apartment, the prisoner declined to walk in advance, explaining that he believed in showing deference to what he termed his superiors. He conversed at length on subjects connected with the trial, and gave explanotions which the counsel hoped to turn to great advantage before Judge Richardson. Riel declared his firm belief that his conduct would be vindicated. He had been working fifteen years in a just and humane cause, and had got into his present position while endeavoring to gain the rights of the oppressed half-breeds. On the subject of religion he was greatly disposed to speak, and he said that the Deity had even exerted special protection over him. He was confident that he was destined to occupy the greatest position ni the dominion. Riel also scouted at the idea of ever returning to the States when he gains his liberty. Before the interview was concluded he said that he did not want his trial conducted on a party basis, but desired judgment on his merits. The prisoner also complained that his health was anything but good owing to rigor of prison discipline. His counsel will probably plead a general denial of the charges supposed to be expressed in the indictment, urging various grounds of defense which will be answered later. Riel's jury panel is composed of thirty farmers, four merchants, one contractor and one hotel keeper.

The Kellogg.

From the Sheboygan Times, June 27, 1885.

Concert at the Opera House Wednesday evening, was very largely attended as we had anticipated it would be. The programme was an excellent one and the rendition of it was most satisfactorily given, if the applause accorded it is to be taken as evidence of the fact. Twelve of the thirteen numbers upon the programme were solos with piano accompaniment, a test which none but first-class artists could withstand successfully. They all did this with such eclat, each member of the company being heartily encored, a compliment to which they pleasantly responded in a manner that brought forth still warmer applause. Miss Kellogg's voice has lost none of its youthful freshness, and she still possesses all the art, technique, and power of expression that have given her the exalted position she has so long occupied as Queen of the concert stage. Miss Laura S. Groves, contralto, and Mr. Morawski, basso, were received with great favor by the audience, and worthily so. Miss Ollie Torbett, a young lady of seventeen, took the house by the ease and graceful skill with which she manipulated her violin in the performance of most difficult music. As a pianist Mr. Adolf Glose has few superiors in rendering the compositions of the recognized masters.

INSPECTION OF BOILERS.

From the Ada Index.

M. F. Williams, representative of the N. W. Manuf'g & Car Co., of Stillwater, has kindly furnished us with information in regard to the inspection of boilers and licensing of engineers, which will prove interesting to engineers and owners of engines. Mr. Scott, the State Inspector, in conversation with Mr. Williams at Stillwater last week said: "That there was a misunderstanding in regard to the law relating to the inspection of steam boilers and licensing of engineers. The law does not prohibit engineers from working without license before the inspector visits the town where the engineer works, nor does it prevent the use of any boiler prior to that visit. The law regulating the licensing of special engineers (thresher engineers) is very liberal, simply requiring that the engineer shall be sufficiently acquainted with the duties of engineer to know how to safely manage his boiler." The law requires that all boilers shall stand a cold water test of 165 lbs which is equal to 250 lbs of steam. Boilers manufactured in the State must stand that test before leaving the shop. It is claimed by all manufacturers that the test is too high as that is about 3 times the pressure usually required while in operation. For that reason, the inspection of old boilers will doubtless be liberal, but new ones must come up to the standard or be condemned. Manufacturers outside of the State who sell their goods here consider it a hardship to make in future a higher grade of boilers for this trade than they use elsewhere or have their goods condemned. The number of accidents which occurred during the past few years with steam boilers made a law of State inspection necessary and while it may cost the manufacturers of our State more money to build their boilers they will certainly be repaid in the end by the increased trade they will receive when it is known that their goods are of a higher grade than those made by eastern manufacturers.

The American Agriculturist for Aug. 1885,

Contains a great variety of original full-page and smaller engravings, illustrating noted farms and farm animals, fruits, convenient implements, domestic contrivances, etc. Rev. E. P. Roe and Mr. A. S. Fuller discourses on Strawberries; Joseph Harris continues his Walks and Talks, and gives hints on the Prevention and Cure of Foot Rot in Sheep, Curing Clover, Hay, etc. Col. Weld writes a description of the La Fe Apiary of St. Domingo, and contributes a notice of the late Wm. M'Combie, and the Angus Doddies. D. D. T. Moore discusses the merits of Small Farms. Dr. Thurber tells about a new Insect Enemy of the Pea, with other horticultural articles. Henry Stewart furnishes a most useful article on Taking off and Treating a Hide; also notes about Labor-saving Implements and Contrivances, and writes about a Southern Stock Range. Joel S. Munson, of Wisconsin, describes a new Hay Derrick. L. C. Root gives his excellent "Bee Notes" for August. David W. Judd contributes various articles. Gen. Armstrong writes an interesting paper About the Farms for the Indian and Freeman, at Old Point Comfort, Va., supported by the Government of the United States and the Legislature of Virginia. Robert B. Roosevelt gives a vivid account of the pleasures of a Day Spent on his beautiful Sharple Yacht. A. I. Thompson furnishes the plans and details of Construction of a Suburban Cottage costing $2,500. Mrs. Welsh shows us a number of pleasant Souvenirs of a Summer Vacation in the Country.—Price, $1.50 a year. Single numbers 15 cts. Address Publishers American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

FARM NOTES.

From the American Rural Home.

In one of the best dairy sections of New York, the average yield from 3,596 cows supplying creameries with milk was only a little over 140 lbs. per cow. This is probably the average for all the cows in the country, good judges placing it at about 125 lbs.

ARTICHOKES FOR SWINE.

The artichoke is said to be gaining advocates in Arizona as a material for fattening pork. As a food plant, the artichoke is generally underestimated. It is really superior to the potato, being richer in albuminous compounds than the latter tuber. It also has the advantage of entire hardiness in extreme northern climates. Freezing does not injure it, and swine may gather the succulent roots for themselves whenever the ground is not frozen.

Concerning the comparative soil exhaustion of oats and Hungarian grass, W. J. Chamberlain, of Ohio, says: "I have raised Hungarian grass and oats side by side. I consider the soil exhaustion less with the former than with the oats, and the soil is certainly in better condition for wheat, and the wheat that follows is better. As for the amount of actual food for cattle by the two, I believe the Hungarian properly managed will produce twice as much per acre as the oats, even if you feed the entire straw of the latter."

The Ladies' Temperance Column.

[This column is placed at the disposal of the Crookston W. C. T. U., who are cordially invited to fill it each week. ED. JOURNAL.]

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

Effect of Alcohol on Arteries.

Dr. Loomis, of New York, on presenting a case of aneurism to his class, made the following pointed statement touching the causative relation of alcohol to this accident: A man can take two or three glasses of stimulants through the day as he may feel the inclination, and he may continue this habit for perhaps twenty years without any evident harm accruing from it; but, when this man reaches that period of life when the vital powers are on the decline, he suddenly feels himself old before his time, for he has all these years been laying the foundation of a chronic endoarteritis. I believe, gentlemen, that fifty per cent. of all these diseases arise from the use of alcoholic stimulants. The more I see of disease, the more I am convinced that, as a rule, a man is young just in proportion as his arteries are healthy, and old as they are diseased.

An Excellent Movement.

A movement is now in progress requiring instruction to be given in the public schools, as to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system. Five States, including New York, have laws requiring such instruction. In no less than nineteen other States, from Maine to Kansas, in the South as well as in the West, similar laws are before the respective legislatures for action. In Pennsylvania the petitions for such an enactment are signed by no less than 700,000 citizens. In Massachusetts the petitions contained about 50,000 signers, including the names of college presidents and professor, physicians, teachers and ministers, and of the representative members of the community. The movement is general and enthusiastic.

The great increase of intemperance among the children of the poorer classes, and the enormous evils which the alcoholic habit works, make this movement most wise and timely. Doctors still discuss certain features of the effect of alcohol on the human constitution; but there is an approaching agreement among the abler physicians upon certain points of primal importance. It is usually regarded that alcohol is not a food. Flint says: "It cannot be regarded as an aliment." "Beer, wine and spirits," affirms Liebig, "contain no element capable of entering into the composition of the blood or the muscular fibre." "That alcoho is incapable of forming any part of the body," says Cameron, "is admitted by all physiologists It cannot be converted into brain, nerve, muscle or blood."

Agreement is perhaps more general as to the transmission of the alcoholic tendency from generation to generation. The alcoholic tendency is a capital example of the law of heredity. "We are omnibuses," says D. Holmes, "in which all our ancestors ride." This inclination for strong drink is transmitted from father to son. "The life of each individual is, in some real sense," remarks Francis Galton, "a continuation of the lives of his ancestors." But it is the testimony of Dr. Willard Parker, "Of all agents, alcohol is the most potent in establishing a heredity that exhibits itself in the destruction of mind and body." Aristotle says: "Drunken women have children like unto themselves," and Plutarch remarks, "One drunkard is the father of another."

Instruction may well be given upon the effects not only of alcohol, but also of opium, chloral hydrate, chloroform, and of tobacco on the human system. The instruction might not cure a habit already formed, but it would tend to prevent the formation of the destructive habit. Not a few boys are led into various forms of self-indulgence, ignorant of their disastrous consequences, or perhaps under the belief that the indulgence is thoroughly healthful. Instruction, removing the ignorance or the error, will prove of advantage in in the development of a strong body, vigorous mind and noble character.

Dr. Carl Schulin, a celebrated eye and ear specialist, will arrive in the city on Tuesday, June 23d, and may be consulted at the Commercial House. The doctor has an established reputation, and all who need his services will not hesitate to call upon him. When he finds a case incurable he will frankly say so, thus saving the patient needless expense. [7-tf]

Notwithstanding times are somewhat slack, Seely's Place still keeps up with the times. The choicest summer drinks always on hand, a nice bowl of soup for lunch, and the best lemonade in the city always on deck. Call and see me, boys. A Circular Letter to the Farmers of Minnesota.

The Minnesota State Farmers Alliance has issued the following circular letter under date of July 6: In view of the recent action of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners regarding the system of "dockage," which has prevailed in this State for the past eight or ten years, which system we are thoroughly convinced has proved decidedly disadvantageous to the farmer in many ways—while it probably has been beneficial in some respects, it has been detrimental in others—after having given the matter a thorough and complete investigation, we are decidedly of the opinion that the system of dockage, as has been practiced heretofore, is wrong in principle and pernicious in practice, and the view taken of it by the board is sound in theory, and the members of the alliance in particular, and all the farmers throughout the State in general should use their utmost endeavors to aid them in bringing about the reform. It is a system that prevails in no other State in the union but Minnesota, the finest wheat country in the world, and which wheat commands the highest price in the world.

First—The farmer gives the offal away.

Second—He hauls it to the country market free.

Third—He pays freight on it from the country market to the terminal or shipping point, say St. Paul, Minneapolis or Duluth. A calculation made recently reveals the fact that we have paid freight on about 15,000,000 pounds of dirt the past year to Minneapolis alone, saying nothing about Duluth or St. Paul.

Fourth—It is based upon a system of "guess work," and common sense will tell us that when the buyer or elevator man guesses against the farmer as to the amount of dirt in his load of grain, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the buyer is going to make himself safe, and if possible more than safe. It's human nature, and he carries out the first principles of human nature and looks out for No. one every time; and we all know that a business founded on a system of "guess work" is no business at all. Now you have the disease, where is the remedy? This reform cannot be brought about in one day, or one month, or one year. But we can make a start, and by our efforts show that we appreciate the efforts of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, whom we are satisfied have the interest of the farmers at heart. This has been shown plainly by their actions, although all of us cannot see it.

Now what we wish to impress upon the farmer is to ever bear this in mind. If we cannot completely carry out this system of reform, and market clean grain, let us get it as clean as we can. Let every farmer see to it that each threshing machine has its sieve screens on, and insist that this shall be done, and flatly and positively refuse to employ any thresher who has not his screen so attached, see that it is kept clean and free and not clogged up, and thus become useless; also have the screenings thrown back from time to time into the machine, and thus reduce the volume of screenings or offal.

An united and combined effort on the part of the farmers will bring about this result, and will, we think, enhance the value of his grain, and we know, reduce the volume of dirt which he hauls to market free and pays freight on to the railroad companies.

ADVICE TO FARMERS.

Special to the St. Paul Globe.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Prof. Dodge, statistician of the agricultural department, in a carefully-written report on the condition of wheat crops, says to farmers that the wheat harvest of the world in 1885 will not be an average one. Hence, prices will eventually advance, but it should be remembered that it requires a full year to move the crops of the world. Heavy harvests following the deficiency do not depress prices materially for many months after garnering. The culmination of the effect is often in the following year. So the large production of last year now fills the granaries of Europe and America and prices are low in the face of current crop failures. No great advance will occur until the excess of stocks shall be consumed. Let the farmer, therefore, who is not pressed for money, deliver slowly until the commercial stocks are depleted, watch markets and if he can hold until late in the autumn or winter he may profit by the scarcity. But he must not assume the existence of the scarcity, which is prophesied by the bulls of the present hour and head for extraordinary prices, refusing reasonable advances or his ultimate loss of price, in interest and rottage, may prove a sorer calamity than the early autumn sales. This is a true word for the ear of the wise farmer.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 11th, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one thousand one hundred and thirty and 33-100 dollars ($1130.33-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas H. Perkins a widower, mortgagor, to Thomas B. Hill, mortgagee, bearing date the thirtieth day of November A. D. 1883, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the thirtieth day of November A. D. 1883, at 2:25 o'clock p. m. in book "M" of mortgages on pages 554 to 556, which said mortgage was given to secure a certain principal promissory note of $1,000 bearing even date with said mortgage and due November first A. D. 1888 with interest thereon from date until paid payable annually as per five coupon notes attached thereto and described therein and in said mortgage. Default having been made in the payment of the coupon of $70.75 being the annual interest on said principal note due November 1st A. D. 1884, and the interest due on said coupon since said November 1st A. D. 1884, and there being a provision in said mortgage authorizing the holder thereof in case of default of any of the conditions therein contained to foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas by reason of said default the power of sale contained therein has become and is operative, the mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said principal note should become due and immediately payable according to the provisions of said note, and mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Heard's Dairyman.

Quite a number of farmers are complaining because lightning travels along the barbed wire fences, destroying the posts and killing stock. Much damage was done in this way during the recent storms. The remedy is simple and cheap. About every ten rods you should make a hole in the ground with a crowbar, say three feet deep, put in a piece of the barbed wire, and connect it with all the wires on the fence by winding it tightly two or three times around each. You should select the dampest spots for these upright wires; such as little sink-holes and ravines hence they should not be set near fence posts or trees, which tend to dry the ground. Of course you must pack the dirt around the part of the barbed wire in the ground.

DEATH IN THE CAN.

St. Paul Globe.

Chloride of zinc, which is employed in the canned goods trade, is a deadly poison. Ulcers of the stomach and bowels and even perforation is produced by this corrosive poison. It is now claimed that the frightful increase of Bright's disease can be traced to the same cause. It is an utter impossibility to seal a can with chloride of zinc without an appreciable quantity of the poison getting into the can. An experiment was made in the presence of a number of eminent physicians and prominent dealers in canned goods. And yet in each case when the can was opened, after all the care the foreman gave the soldering process, several drops of the chloride of zinc were found in the bottom. Now when this poison gets into the can when all this care is used, what is the probability when the cans are sealed as they are in a rush of business. The public press has opened a crusade against this dangerous method of putting up commodities which the public need and must have. A writer in the Brooklyn Eagle thus describes the process of canning in a large establishment in Baltimore. "A capper receives 10 cents a hundred cans for putting on the caps. He has to furnish his own tools, flux and solder. Instead of carefully painting round the can with a marking brush, the capper has a brush as large as that used by a house painter. His cans are in trays of a dozen of each, he lays his caps on and with one dab of his brush across the top of the can the tops of the whole twelve are rendered acid; then the soldering iron runs around. The central hole is not closed. These cans are then put into an iron crate and lowered into a hot bath, where they stay from five to twenty minutes, according to the stuff that is being processed. The acid left on the top of the can is washed off with this bath, and the bath often becomes so acid that the workmen can solder from the water of the bath as a flux. The longer the bath is used the dirtier it becomes. Now as these goods are lifted from the bath this central vent hole is open, and the can is liable to have this water of the bath admitted. Still further is this liability increased if there is a leak in the can, making two holes for air and water instead of one vent.

Now when fusil of oil in whiskey is known to be the cause of Bright's disease, is it any wonder, at the rate canned goods are consumed in this country, and each can has an appreciable amount of the deadly chloride of zinc, which attacks the kidneys, that the consumption of canned goods and Bright's disease are going hand in hand in this country? Our State laws should compel the canners to seal their goods with resin.

Holsteins vs. Jerseys.

John M. Stahl, in writing to the Farm and Home on the comparative merits of the Holsteins and Jerseys, says:

"The Holstein, or Friesian, is a much larger animal than the Jersey. Its home is North Holland, where the climate is more vigorous and where it does not receive petting or dainty food to such an extent as does the Jersey. The Jersey does not give much milk, but it is very rich. The Holstein gives a very large yield, but it lacks the richness of the Jersey milk. The Jersey milk will make much more butter than the same quantity of Holstein milk; but the tests of the last two years go to show, almost exclusively, that the greater yield of the Holsteins more than compensates for the poverty of the milk, and that during the year a Holstein would make more butter than a Jersey.

Unlike the Jersey, the Holstein will endure considerable hardship—a point of no little importance to the man who cannot shelter all his cattle, even in the climate of the south, and it will eat coarse food, or food of not the best quality—another point that will enhance its value in the eyes of the farmer in any part of the country.

But the chief point of superiority which the Holstein possesses over the Jersey, is its beef quality. While the male Jersey calf must be sacrificed, the male Holstein calf can be fed at a profit. Though not the best beef breed, the Holstein is a good one. For beef it is not so good as the Shorthorn, Polled-Angus, Devon or Hereford, but its superiority over any of these in the matter of milk and butter is far greater than its inferiority to them in beef production, as its superiority over the Jersey in milk yield is far greater than its inferiority to the Jersey in butter production. The beef quality of the Holstein is a valuable characteristic. The specialist will want an animal specially adapted to certain purposes; but the general farmer wants an animal of general excellence. The great mass of farmers cannot keep one pure breed for milk, another for butter, and yet a third for beef. But as they want beef, butter and milk, they will naturally favor a breed that, while it does not excel all other breeds in these points, yet will produce milk, butter or beef as occasion may make desirable, at a profit. Such a breed is the Holstein. As an all-purpose animal it is equalled only by those belonging to the milk strains of the Shorthorn breeds.

How Much Seed Wheat per Acre.

One of the questions to which there is no definite answer is, how much wheat shall be sown to the acre? Much depends on the condition of the soil, the degree of fertility, the time of sowing, the liability to injury from birds and insects, and on the subsequent character of the season. As a rule, less seed is required when sown with a drill, than broadcast; less when sown early, than when sown late. In western New York, some farmers sow only one bushel per acre; still more sow five pecks with a drill, and six pecks, if broadcast. Occasionally two bushels per acre are sown, but probably the average is one and a half bushel. The American Agriculturist has readers in Great Britain, where three bushels are sown; and again, in sections of our own country, where three pecks are the rule. To the inexperienced, we can give no better advice, than to recommend them to ask their neighbors. There is generally some good reason for a prevailing practice. If you think your neighbors are sowing too much, sow a little less; if you think they are sowing too little, sow a peck more. Do not show your independence by halving or doubling up. If you do, you are pretty certain to make a mistake.—[Joseph Harris is American Agriculturist for August.

Small versus Large Farms.

Our own notion is that small farms, well cultivated, are almost invariably the most profitable; and hence, we firmly believe (what has so often been asserted,) that if many a farmer would sell half or two-thirds of the acres he now occupies, and poorly tills and manages, and devote his entire time and energies to the care and cultivation of the remainder, he would derive far more profit from his labor and investment, with much less vexation of spirit. The fact is, as somebody truly asserts, we have too many farmers who are "land poor"—who have so much land they cannot make a living. Paradoxical as this may appear, it applies truthfully to many a naturally fertile and productive locality. When such farmers have learned that it is not economy to own more land than they can till in the most profitable manner, so that it will pay for the money expended in keeping it free from taxes, weeds, and other encumbrances, they will have solved the problem of ease in practical rural life. The happiest and thriftiest farmers we have ever known lived on farms of from of only ten to one hundred acres, every foot of which was made to count. On the other hand, the farmer who has so many broad acres that he cannot walk over them daily—where rods of fence corners are never cultivated or otherwise utilized—lives a life of anxiety and worry. Instead of working like slaves and living in a miserly manner, in order to "run a big farm," or purchase "all the land that joins them," it would be wise for hosts of farmers to sell some of their efforts upon limited areas, and look more to the comfort and happiness of their households, and the proper education of their children. Even if large farms were the most profitable—which we deny—small ones are to be preferred for many and cogent reasons, not the least of which are the comfort, peace, and general welfare of the owners and their families.—[D. D. T. Moore in American Agriculturist for August.

Shoeing Horses.

On light soils that are free from stones, horses may generally go unshod without injury. It is probably too sudden an innovation to stop shoeing horses under all circumstances at present, but no doubt a colt which has run without shoes for two years, might still go on without them, and not suffer. A light shoe without calks, to protect the crust of the hoof from breaking, and put on without ever cutting the frog, leaving that to wear naturally, would answer every desirable purpose where shoes are necessary. There are light steel shoes, made with projecting blunt spurs, that give a secure foothold, and are better for the horse than the common, roughly made, heavy iron ones, which are often ignorantly set.—[American Agriculturist for August.

will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

JAIL DELIVERY.

On Tuesday evening about 10:30 the jail was broken open and four of the six prisoners therein confined escaped. The four who got away were the tramps who were sent in from East Grand Forks awhile ago; the two who remained were Scott and Halloran, the former serving out his sentence for stealing an overcoat and the latter held to the next term of the court under a charge of mayhem. The jailor, Ole Hanson, is out in the Thirteen Towns on business, leaving the jail in charge of his brother-in-law, deputy jailor Larson. During Larson's temporary absence down town the prisoners cut the bars to the window and lit out. Mrs. Hanson, the jailor's wife, discovered what was up and notified John Barnes, who in turn reported to others, among them V. D. Carruth, who at once notified Sheriff W. F. Zwickey, who, after finding the deputy at Utzinger's saloon, went at once to the jail and secured the remaining prisoners and at once took measures to capture the birds. The cause of this escapade seems to be a very defective jail and the carelessness of the deputy. The jail is provided with three steel cells and the Sheriff's orders to the jailer have been positive to keep his prisoners incarcerated in the cells during his absence, and to lock them in every night at seven o'clock. During the hot weather they have been allowed to remain in the corridor while the jailer was on the premises, but with positive orders that they should be locked in whenever the jailer was obliged to be away from the jail. This order was disregarded and the prisoners took advantage of it to skip, the construction of the jail and the disregard of orders on the part of the jailer rendering their task an easy one. That Polk County needs a jail has been apparent to everybody who has seen the dry-goods box, yclept jail, that has served for this purpose. It is a laughing stock and will only hold such as are a mind to stay. The means of escape in this case were evidently furnished by friends of the prisoners outside and there is nothing to prevent a repetition of the same in the future. If we cannot build a new jail at once a high board fence enclosing the yard would answer for the present and prevent future escapes in this manner.

Woodman, Spare That Tree!

No wonder the Messenger howls at the spoliation of the timber in the Thirteen Towns if it is all as valuable as the one tree that a resident of the aforesaid T. T. recently cut and was fined $18 and costs. (amounting to $50) We don't blame good brother R. for vain regrets that he had not caught on to such a claim in time. But perhaps he could not have disposed of trees to as good advantage. In this case the party was cutting on a railroad grant and he has appealed his case to the District Court.

DIED

ROBERTS—In this city, July 27th, 1885, of diphtheria, Georgie Roberts, aged 6 years, 1 month and 20 days.

Deceased was the youngest son of Mr. Allen P. Roberts, of Wabasha, and a nephew of Mrs. Ellen M. Pierce, of this city. He had been in Crookston but a few days visiting relatives and friends, when he was attacked by that dread disease, diphtheria, which terminated his young life.

A short time it has been, dear Georgie,
That they laid your gentle form to rest,
Your spirit's flown to meet your mamma,
Who went before to join the blest.

It was so sad to see you die,
For brother and for papa dear,
Now on the grassy hill you lie,
And oh! to them the world is drear.

No more your loving face we'll see,
Nor footsteps hear; no more they roam
Nor see your eyes so full of glee;
No more at home we'll speak to thee.

It was so sad for your true friends,
While watching at your bedside,
And to hear you say before you died,
"Tell all my friends good by!"

Sleep on, dear Georgie, take your rest,
You're happy in that land so fair,
Your lovely spirit's with the blest,
While we but long to meet you there.

THE GREAT SOLDIER DEAD.

On Thursday morning, July 23d, the electric wires flashed across this continent and throughout the civilized world this brief sentence: "Gen. Grant died at 8:5 this morning." Although not unexpected, the news sent a thrill of pain through every loyal American heart, with the feeling that it is well with the noble dead. Afflicted with an incurable, painful disease, it is well that he has passed into rest, while on the broad page of history his name will ever live beside that of a Washington, Lafayette and Lincoln. His death was painless and tranquil, and he died surrounded by his loved ones, for whom his last earthly efforts were put forth. It is said that his anxiety to provide for his wife kept him alive until he had completed his memoirs, a book that he has personally written and finished. While Gen. Grant may not be said to have been the greatest statesman who ever lived, yet as a great soldier and a true man, he is one of the greatest men who ever lived, and his death is sincerely mourned by every true American. His life-work is done and well done, and his name will ever live in the annals of history. "Let him have peace!"

The Red Lake Falls Messenger has found a mare's nest again. This time it is not a dam by a mill site nor a mill by a dam site, but he has a big saw log in his eye and smells a b-a-d pine land ring and is dressed in mourning because he did not "catch on in time." He says that somebody "gobbled up all of the pine on the Thirteen Towns before anybody knew there was any pine on it!" "They had it all taken, proved up and deeded to somebody else before it was in the market at all?" And if it had not been for an ACCIDENT (the election of Cleveland) "nobody would never have known nothing about it!" Too bad, No. 2. But somehow Bro. Rothpletz' statements seem to be a bit misty and a little out of joint. In the first place, in the Thirteen Towns proper, there is not enough pine to build a hen-coop except on two townships that were recently surveyed by O. L. Hamery. This land was just as much subject to entry under squatters rights to Rothpletz as to any other man, only he did not see far enough beyond his nose to see it, hence his cry of "phraud!" But Bro. Rothpletz claims to be in possession of some evidence in this matter and of course in the interest of "Reform and tother fellow" he will trot it out. We await his trot.

THE EXTRA SESSION.

The only argument worthy of consideration against an extra session is advanced by the Moorhead News when it says that it would be impossible to obtain what we need from the present Legislature. It is, of course, controlled by that portion of the State that would not be benefitted by re-apportionment and for that reason alone an extra session would not avail us. If there was a reasonable chance for obtaining a much needed apportionment the mere expense of the session should not be allowed to cut any figure and we imagine that were the southern part of the State, or St. Paul and Minneapolis interested in some little scheme of a few dollars advantage to them the cost to the State would be a mere bagatelle. In our case they would unite to prevent our obtaining our just rights and the probability is that such will be the case until they are forced to grant them. The right and the wrong in such cases cuts but little figure. The power to hold control is the secret of it and our opponents hold that, so that it seems that all that is left for us to do is to grin and bear it as best we may may until the national census forces a change.

WHEAT PRICES.

Monday's Pioneer Press contains a long article on the future prices of wheat derived from interviews with prominent wheat buyers and millers in Minneapolis and St. Paul in which it is figured out that there will be a rise in the price but not to any great degree before Jan. 1st. In arriving at this conclusion no account is taken of the possible shortage on spring wheat caused by wet weather. A shortage of 150,000,000 bushels of winter wheat is allowed but the spring wheat crop is estimated at nearly if not quite as as much as in past years while the fact is that the crop in the Northwest is now in a very critical condition and much loss will result. Should the present unfavorable weather last a week or ten days longer the entire crop will be ruined. Already reports begin to reach us of great damage having already been done and unless there is an immediate change for the better the result will be a total failure. Our wheat is mostly in that stage where it is most susceptible to injury and while we hope for the best we cannot but view the situation with alarm. It is impossible to harvest anything near such a crop as we had last year but this shortage added to the 150,000,000 bushels winter wheat shortage ought to have a beneficial effect on prices and should make difference enough to cover the loss in quantity. If we should get, from one-half to two-thirds what is estimated for us the difference in price should be enough to compensate for the loss and we think it will. We do not think that the true condition will be realized in time to have much effect upon the early market but the farmer who can keep his wheat has a good prospect for a bonanza.

EXTRA SESSION.

From the Moorhead News.

A number of the newspapers published in the northern part of Minnesota are advocating an extra session of the legislature next winter for the avowed purpose of passing a bill to reapportion the representation in the State Legislature, to be based on the State census just taken. The papers generally claim that the large increase of population in the northern portion of the State entitles the people herein to a much larger representation than they now have, which is based upon the United States census of 1880. The News has not up to this date taken any part in the discussion, but has carefully noted what has been said in the newspapers that have discussed the question. The reasons advanced by them are mostly sound, and admit of little opposition. But there is large room to doubt that the extra session would effect the result desired. It is more than probable—it is almost a certainty that an apportionment bill, based upon the figures of the census now being compiled, would be defeated. Under the census the northern part of the State, including Hennepin and Ramsey Counties would be entitled to increased representation, and in a much larger ratio than the rest of the State. That moiety (the southern part) of the State greatly outnumbers the other moiety in the legislature as now existing. Is it at all probable that the majority is going to vote to reduce their power until they are compelled to by inexorable custom and the force of public opinion? No apportionment has ever been made in this State based upon a census taken under State authority, but all have been made on the United States census. This fact would be a sufficient pretext for the southern members to vote down any apportionment bill offered in special session, and there would be no help for it. Thus the State would be saddled with the burden of a debt of $100,000 more or less, which an extra session would cost. This would be the bitter fruit of an immature and inconsiderate clamor started by selfish and ambitious patriots. We want no extra session of the legislature next winter.

Duluth & Winnipeg.

DULUTH, Special Telegram, July 23.—Oliver W. Barnes of New York city, one of the capitalists who is reported to be interested in the purchase of the Duluth & Winnipeg branches and road beds, has sent here J. Opperman, the civil engineer of Buffalo, N. Y., and formerly of the engineering corps of the Lehigh Valley road, with instructions to personally go over the line of the road and examine its location, report on the value of the work already done on line and what changes should be made, etc. Mr. Opperman arrived to-day and in company with two woodsmen leaves for his work on Saturday. He will be two months in making the examination.

Marshall County Leader: We took a run to Crookston Monday. The Gem City, though not so lively as we have seen it, is moving steadily along to greatness. Judge Reynolds is rapidly recovering from his recent severe illness, and will soon be able to take hold of official work again. The attorneys all seem to be busy protecting the rights of the innocent and other labors of love. Bros. McGrew and Cooke, of the Chronicle and JOURNAL, both mutter just a little bit about dull times, but continue to wear good clothes and enlarge their bank accounts. Judge Cromb seems just as happy as though he had never seen the returns of 1884, and when his term of service in his present turbulent position expires, he will gracefully dump himself into his easy chair as president of the Merchants' National Bank and smile on serenely.

Fisher Bulletin: Gunder L. Olson, a lad about 15 years of age, who has been working for the past six years for Tollef Tollefson, of Sand Hill, met with his death under somewhat peculiar circumstances on Saturday last. It appears Tollef was cleaning out an old well and Gunder in the evening thought he would go down. He did so unasked, and he was evidently overcome by an accumulation of gas, for without making any cry for help he fell into the water which was some fifteen feet deep and his body was not recovered till life was extinct. What makes the case remarkable was, that another boy went down the well early in the day, and the only explanation we can give is that water, which was exceedingly putrid, had been drawn up and the accumulated gas thus evolved, proved fatal in Gunder's case. On Tuesday last the deputy coroner, Dr. Lankester, held an inquest on the body at the house of Tollef Tollefson, when the following verdict was recorded:

That the said Gunder L. Olson came by his death on the 18th day of July, 1885, from going down to clean a well on the property of Tolef Tollefson; that whether he died prior to falling into the water we are unable to say, but it is our opinion that the foul air caused him to become unconscious and fall into the water and thereby he was drowned, or that the foul air itself caused his death, he having according to the evidence a weak heart, and we further state that no blame is to be ascribed to any party or parties. Frank Hansen, foreman; Jorgen Jorgenson, Aslak G. Dale, R. T. Plumb, Benedik O. Brelland, Sven G. Haregesen.

Red Lake Falls Gazette: The storm of last Friday night was more severe than anticipated. At this point, the wind was not severe, but further south it wrought considerable damage. The wind was from the west, and was the heaviest a couple of miles north of Gentilly, where it unroofed the residences of Phileas Derwin and Henry Bourdon, and completely destroyed the frame building of Albert Chiniquy. The wind was also severe in the southern part of Terrebonne, where it unroofed Napoleon Fontaine's residence and damaged several other buildings. Some grain was blown down, but the injury to crops is slight.

GENERAL GRANT'S BOOK.

NEW YORK, July 1, 1885.

In response to numerous inquiries from all sections of the country in regard to the "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant," we would say: The work will be issued in two volumes to be published separately, about the first days of December and March next, respectively. It will be sold exclusively by subscription and will not be found at the book stores after the active canvass has ceased, as is the case with many subscription books. Extraordinary precaution is being taken to keep this book out of the book trade. Private marks are placed in each copy, and any agent detected in supplying the first volume to the book-stores will be at once discharged, and prosecuted under his contract; and the second volume will be delivered to the bona-fide subscribers by special deliverers appointed by us. Some unprincipled book-sellers, who cannot obtain the work, are advertising it for sale and at a reduced price, thus attempting to rob Gen. Grant of a portion of his hard-earned profits, by reducing the price and discouraging our agents. This is simply mischievous and intended to embarrass our agents and the subscription trade. In the end it can result in no profit to them. Other scheming publishers are advertising works whose titles are so ingeniously arranged as to resemble Gen. Grant's Memoirs, purposely withholding the author's name, and in various ways imitating that work with the evident intention of deceiving the public and inducing them to purchase a book that they do not want—a work with which General Grant has had nothing to do, and from which he derives no benefit whatever, and which works have little more value than the paper upon which they are printed. Such unprincipled publishers and dealers deserve the execration of their countrymen. They seek to snatch the budding fruit of hard-earned toil from the man, who, above all living men, has done so much for his countrymen, and who has worked so long and patiently, under trying circumstances, in a last effort to supply a competence in his declining days, for himself and family—the only legacy he has to leave them, except his name, which belongs to his country. If, by any chance a few copies of the first volume appear in the trade, the agent selling them will at once be detected and prosecuted, and people buying that volume will not be able to get the second volume. Our agents will not fill orders for the second volume except to those who subscribe for the first. We have decided to manufacture only sufficient copies to supply the orders of our subscribers, as our agents report them from time to time. In view of this, we hope every one who desires the work will subscribe early. Justice to both General Grant and ourselves demands this course, as the profits must not be reduced by a large stock of unsold volumes. No one is authorized to take orders except our regularly appointed agents, who are all supplied with sample books and certificates of appointment; and dealers who advertise this work will sadly disappoint their customers, especially in the delivery of the second volume. We say to all who wish the complete work promptly on the issue of the respective volumes, that the only way to obtain it is to subscribe with one of our authorized agents. And by so subscribing, we assure the public that General Grant himself receives the full return for his labor, as his remuneration is on a basis of the profits on the book, and his share comprises the great bulk of the profits. We make this statement that the public may not be deceived, and with the feeling that the General's countrymen wish to place their subscriptions where they know he is receiving the full benefit of them. Yours respectfully,

CHAS. L. WEBSTER & Co.,
Publishers.

Ada Index: Ed. Ashelman, Charlie Dunckon, Gus. Bowman and Jos. Martinson went out to Maple Lake on a fishing excursion last Saturday, returning Monday. They were entertained by W. N. Godfrey. The boys had good luck and lots of fun.

A Good Thing for Every One,

At trifling cost. Not only farmers but city people, indeed those of all occupations, and particularly housekeepers, will find much most valuable, practical information in the Prairie Farmer, as now edited by Orange Judd, whose writings and teachings have been read and appreciated for 32 years past. The paper is neatly printed, finely illustrated, and has a most valuable housekeepers' department. To enable all to become acquainted with this paper, as it is now, it is offered at half price, for six months (26 weekly issues) or, for the nominal price of 50 cents. No other investment of so small a sum will bring returns so ample. The number for July 25th is alone worth a full year's subscription price. Send fifty cents for the half year, or at least send for a specimen copy. Address Prairie Farmer, Chicago, Ill.

WHEAT AND BUSINESS.

Philadelphia Press.

The wheat crop of 1885 may now be considered as determined within certain limits. It may fall as low as 331,000,000 bushels (Tallmadge's estimate,) rise to 361,000,000 (agricultural department estimate,) or at the very best reach 381,000,000 (various exchange estimates.) The strong probability is that the second estimate will prove correct, unless some serious disaster overtakes spring wheat which is now going through the closing stages of its most critical month.

Taking 361,000,000, as the basis of calculation, it appears that the crop is the smallest since 1876, and almost precisely equal to 1877. The population then was one-fifth to one-fourth smaller than now, and the area only five-eighths as large as now. To put it in another way, when a crop of this size was last produced it was grown for a population of 75 to 80 per cent as large as now, and to grow it five acres were cultivated where eight needed plow and reaper to harvest this year's meagre crop. It has cost 60 per cent more to produce this crop—for acreage increases; cost of production—and the consumption, measured by population—has increased one-third to one-fourth. The crop of 1877 left to a population of 45,000,000 an export of 90,000,000 bushels, 274,000,000 being retained for surplus and consumption. The population to be fed from the crop of this year is at least 58,500,000, and in our judgment approaches 60,000,000 for it is idle to suppose that the prosperous years years 1879-'83 have not accelerated the growth of population. Nor is there lacking strong corroborative proof that the increase has been rapid. In 1877 the farmer raised 18.0 bushels by cultivating an acre; he has now only 9, yet an acre has cost most farmers more now than then.

Turning to consumption, if this is proportionately as large as in 1877-8—a period of depression and of strikes much like that now in progress—the entire crop of 1885 will be exhausted in meeting domestic demands for feed, seed and the arts. Nor at the widest extremes can our per capita consumption for all purposes be placed at less than 5.50 or more than 6 bushels. The personal consumption per inhabitant is not less than 4.5 bushels, seed requires in the coming year 44,000,000 bushels at least, and other demands raise the total consumption per person to the amount just indicated, and the total domestic demand of the least population the United States now has must be 320,000,000 bushels, or at the largest 360,000,000 bushels. The margin for export on the present crop cannot, therefore, be over 45,000,000, and may be all, with the chances, if any, in favor of the theory that the present crop will all be needed at home, or so much of it that the remainder for export will drop as low as after the crop of 1865-6, when the exports were only 4 per cent of the crop.

With the current crop all or nearly all absorbed by consumption at home, the only remainder left for export is in the surplus. This is fortunately large. The deficiency is now 140,000,000 bushels upwards. In 1883 when the decrease from 1882 was 80,000,000 bushels, the surplus from 1882 at home and abroad was so large that prices fell the year through, and in 1881, with a deficiency of 120,000,000 bushels, the surplus again left 123,000,000 for export; but the increase in domestic demands since 1881 is 30,000,000, and since 1883 half this, and the practical result is that the effective deficiency is thus much larger and the exportable supply from last year's deficiency is proportionately diminished. The surplus last year is, however, fortunately larger than before in our history. The inquiry made by Bradstreets' discovered 58,000,000 bushels of visible supply, which it enlarges by various hypotheses to 105,000,000 bushels. Deducting from this the amount sure to be carried over of from 25,000,000 to 34,000,000 bushels, and it will be seen that 70,000,000 remains as the outside of probable exports in the approaching year. All things considered, it may be doubted if even this is not an over estimate of our possible exports, although we must go back to 1875-6 for wheat shipments as small.

These small exports will, however, play no such part in the world's wheat supply abroad as ten years ago. In 1877-8, when our wheat product was as small as now, the world's production was, roughly, 1,500,000,000 bushels; it is now at least 2,000,000,000, and in considering the effect upon price of our present supply, it must be remembered that for the first time in many years the United States is growing a bare sixth of the world's wheat, instead of a full fourth, as in the past. The practical result must be that it is unsafe to reckon over-much on an advance to high prices on the basis of our supply alone.

Corn, above all, seems likely to do much to retrieve our short wheat crop. If, as reported, condition is up to 1880, and acreage is 74,000,000 acres, or 10,000,000 over that year, a crop of twenty-eight bushels to the acre, or 2,100,000,000 bushels is possible. Of the wheat deficit, from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 bushels, or over one-fourth of the whole, is due to reduced acreage transferred from wheat to corn, and represents an increase, not a decrease, of our gross food resources. Given good weather, and a good corn crop on the scale indicated, and our total food exports will equal the average of recent years, and food remain cheap. Add to this the enormous cotton crop before us, and the short wheat crop may work less evil than is now feared by many.

The August number of Dorcas contains more than the usual amount of technical matter. The magazine is growing in favor with the ladies every month. There is a great variety of general information which is invaluable to the worker. No one interested in fancy work will fail to find in this number something especially useful. Embroidery, knitting, netting and crochet are all introduced, giving directions and suggestions for summer work. The patterns are selected with taste and judgment, and are described in the plainest and most concise manner possible. No well regulated household should be without the Dorcas. The Ladies' Temperance Column.

PLEDGE.

"Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled fermented and malt liquors, including wine and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same.

THE LAW IS THE CRIMINAL.

To the Editor of the Witness.

As you will see by my place of residence I am having an excellent opportunity for sensible thoughts upon the subjects of total abstinence and prohibition, seeing that I am now a sober man, and with your permission, I will say what is upon my mind to your readers.

I am thirty-seven years of age; the son, grandson, and great-grandson of drinkingmen, whose vitiated appetites have been handed down to unfortunate me. Even as I write these words, the desire for a glass of whiskey runs riot through brain and stomach. So much for heredity.

As a boy, my tastes were abnormal. I succumbed to them, and consolidated upon tobacco, and have been a steady user of it ever since I was ten years old. However, having the terrible example of my father before me, I did not yield to rum until 1877, when I drank my first glass, upon the solicitation of a young lady at her New Year reception: "You gentlemen have a cold day for making calls; take something that will keep off the cold."

Well, to make a long story short, the living devil within me was unchained. Oh yes, I could "take a drink or two and stop," but found it harder to do every time for three years—never dreaming that rum would eventually become the master. Meantime, meeting a sweet, lovable girl, I married, and for several months did my drinking secretly and methodically, so that she knew nothing of it until our babe was some few months old. Then I became, through indulgence, an habitual daily drunkard; broke clear through; came home from daily toil either drunk or plainly showing I had been drinking. This was nearly five years ago. Since then from bad to worse; the old, old tale of suffering, semi-starvation for the dear ones at home, and ruin for myself, and through all this my poor wife has been patient with me—faithful in everything, hoping ever. What a hopeful thing a woman's heart is! Here I am to-day in jail on a criminal charge and guilty (or at least guilty in the law's eye—morally not, for I was drunk when I broke the law;) my wife and babes—never so appreciated as now—in their blighted home weeping for the husband and father who might be with them today but for the accursed thing and his infernal hereditary appetite for it. How they will live God alone knows, for I expect a severe sentence for stealing.

If God lets me live through my term, I am resolved that die I will before I will again let whiskey or any of its congeners ever again down my throat; moreover, if I can find chances to do so I intend making my voice heard loudly, beseeching my fellow men to put a sure stop upon the manufacture and sale of all intoxicants.

Oh! men of this land, who have the means, and gifts of mind and education, who are passive in this question of prohibition, why don't you wake up and lend your time, money and talent to put an end to this drunkard-making, family-ruining, hell-sending, eternally damning traffic? Of seven semblances of manhood in this jail there are six who are here directly from the saloon. Four of these will in all human probability reach the penitentiary. Two boys, the oldest not twelve, are here, their father a drunkard, their mother dead through heartbreak.

I want to lead a new life with my family when my time is out. I will have to go to Iowa or some other prohibition State, for I will not take any risks. I am fully determined on being a different man, God being my helper. Readers of the Witness, remember my family and myself in your prayers. Throw yourselves into the breach, and agitate for prohibition until it is a fixed law in every part of this country. I ask this as a dying man would ask mercy of his God. Think of the victim of the rum power, his wife and children; he is everywhere.

ONE WHO KNOWS THE STING.

In Jail, July 4th.

Prevention Is Better Than Cure.

Nine-tenths of the miseries by the domestic animals are preventable. Horses suffer from the mistakes of their owners. The feet suffer most from disease, the eyes next, the lungs after the eyes, and the feeding produces most of the intestinal disorders. Bad shoeing causes almost every prevalent lameness; even spavins and ringbones are due to bad shoeing, and the use of calks, which throw the foot out of a proper level, and cause straining of the joints and ligaments. The cutting away of the frog exposes the tender interior of the foot to bruises, and causes disease. Foul stables with pungent odors, which cause the harness to rot, and destroy the varnish upon carriages, may well be expected to injure the eyes and the lungs and air passages, and over feeding, or irregular feeding and watering produce indigestion and colic, and encourage the multiplication of worms. It is of far greater importance to avoid all these causes of trouble, than to seek remedies for them.—[American Agriculturist for August.

Dr. Carl Schulin, a celebrated eye and ear specialist, will arrive in the city on Tuesday, June 23d, and may be consulted at the Commercial House. The doctor has an established reputation, and all who need his services will not hesitate to call upon him. When he finds a case incurable he will frankly say so, thus saving the patient needless expense. [7-tf]

Notwithstanding times are somewhat slack, Seely's Place still keeps up with the times. The choicest summer drinks always on hand, a nice bowl of soup for lunch, and the best lemonade in the city always on deck. Call and see me, boys. Remember Seely's place, the cosiest little place northwest of Chicago. [11-tf]

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication July 16th, 1885.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of seven hundred and seventy-two and 81-100 dollars, ($772.81-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Louis A. Genereux, unmarried to Lauretta M. Boies, bearing date the 11th day of March A. D. 1884, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1884, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 44 and 47, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $700 bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 11th day of March 1889, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that past due interest thereon should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date said interest became due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1885, and the interest now due on said interest the mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-nine (29,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of August, A. D. 1885, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated July 14th, A. D. 1885.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication July 16th 1885.]

BE IT KNOWN, that on the seventeenth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and eighty, Louis Gonyea and Olevien Gonyea, his wife, made, executed and delivered unto The Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, their certain mortgage, that said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, on the seventeenth day of December A. D. 1880, at three o'clock in the afternoon, in book "C" of mortgages, on pages four hundred and six to four hundred and eight, inclusive, that said mortgage conveyed the hereinafter described premises to secure the payment of four hundred ($400.00100) dollars, in five years from its date, and the interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum, per annum, payable semi-annually, that default has been made in the payment of interest on said principal sum, wherefore, as authorized by the conditions of said mortgage the mortgagee therein, has elected to declare and does hereby declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage, together with the interest thereon accrued, due and payable immediately, that there is hereby claimed to be due on said mortgage debt the sum of five hundred and eleven ($511.00-100) dollars, and the further sum of fifteen and 40-100 ($15.40-00) dollars paid by the mortgagee for the taxes on said mortgaged premises for the year A. D. 1882, with interest on said sum from the seventeenth day of September 1883 the date when said taxes were paid, that no action, or proceeding, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, that said mortgaged premises are situate in Polk County, Minnesota, and are described as follows, viz: The west half (w½) of the northeast quarter (ne¼) and east half of northwest quarter (e½ of nw¼) of Section eighteen (18,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-five (45,) containing one hundred and sixty acres (more or less) according to the United States Government survey.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by reason of said default in the conditions of said mortgage, and by virtue of the power of sale therein contained said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said described mortgaged premises, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the twenty-ninth day of August A. D. 1885, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and twenty-five dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption as provided by law.

BE IT KNOWN, that on the sixteenth day of June one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, Zebedee Lusia and Ida Lusia, his wife, made, executed and delivered unto The Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, their certain mortgage, that said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, on the twenty-fifth day of June A. Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class matter.

Fargo Daily Argus, July 30th: At Moorhead the storm yesterday morning was very severe, a number of small out-buildings being blown down, part of the roof taken off the county jail and nearly all the east roof off the foundry, from which some 20,000 feet of lumber were removed together and dashed to the ground, making kindling wood of the entire mass. At the Grand Pacific Hotel a chimney on one of the towers was struck by lightning and collapsed, falling on a portion of the roof some fifteen feet below and breaking in a space about twenty feet square of the roof, where it struck on mattresses and storm windows stored in the attic, then went through the floor and ceiling into a bedroom below, making a hole some four by eight feet in size. The debris descended on the bed occupied by Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Thompson, breaking down the bed and covering them to a depth of from one to two feet with brick and mortar. A cry of fire was raised, the hose brought out, and just as the water was about to be turned on it was ascertained that there was no fire in the building. After sometime and considerable hard work Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were removed, and strange as it may seem, not a bone was broken so far as could be learned, but they were bruised and cut from toe to skull, while between their heads, on the bed, rested a solid mass of brick and mortar about a foot square. All the while they were being removed the rain descended in torrents through the roof and added to the discomforture of the work. The damage at the hotel will reach some $500. Miss Clara Louise Kellogg occupied the room beneath the suite of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, and the plastering was shaken off; she was greatly frightened and rushed into the hall in her night robes, and it was some time before she could be quieted.

FARM NOTES.

Farmers' Tribune.

THE CHEAPEST FOOD FOR COWS.

Most dairymen suppose that hay is the cheapest food for their cows, and think it a misfortune to be short of hay—which is in a sense true, for every-one should try to produce all the hay required by his stock—but it is seldom true that the market price of grain is higher than hay. If we consider the relative nutritive value of hay and grain, or product of grain, we find that good meadow hay or clover is no cheaper at $13 to $14 per ton than good wheat or bran or middlings at $20 or $21 per ton or corn meal at $22 or $23 per ton, or linseed cake or meal at $32 to $38 per ton. Now this does not mean that corn meal, middlings or oil meal, would be just as appropriate for the complete food of a cow as hay. We know that such concentrated food would be quite dangerous to feed a cow without some coarse fodder, but it means that the nutriment in these foods will be as cheap to make up any deficiency in the ration at these prices as hay at the price mentioned. Therefore, when hay is dear in the dairy districts, instead of buying hay the dairymen should by grain in some form to help him out. The grain will be cheapest, and his cows come through in much better condition for the milking season than if they had all the good hay they could eat. All a cow requires over twelve to fifteen pounds of hay should be made up in grain food. Twelve pounds of hay and eight pounds of middlings per day will winter a 1,000 pound cow much better than thirty pounds of hay per day. But the ground feed should be mixed with cut hay moistened, so the ground feed will adhere to it, and must be eaten with the hay, and raised and remasticated. Fine feed fed alone is not raised and remasticated, but goes on to the fourth stomach without further mastication.

HOW TO BUILD THE STACK.

The great point to be secured in stacking hay is to keep the center the highest. If this is done, water cannot penetrate into the stack, but will find its way to the outside under the most unfavorable circumstances. If, on the other hand, the center is hollow, the water must drain into the center, and so ruin the stack. An excellent way to build a stack is to set a tall sapling firmly in the ground, with a foundation of rails around it; then begin in the center and place the hay around the pole, gradually spreading, until the edge of the base is reached. Continue building up the stack, the highest in the center around the pole, the builder standing in the center, so as to tread the hay firmly there. As the stack settles, the outside sinks more than the center, and helps to make the stack better. The top of the stack is finished by fastening a covering of hay to the pole, with hay bands wound firmly around it. A stack so made will not leak, and even clover hay may be safely stacked in this manner, because the water must make its way to the outside by the force of gravity, and escape there by dropping to the to the ground clear of the stack.

WILD SPEAR GRASS.

The Webster (Dak.) Herald says: What is to be done to exterminate the wild spear grass so destructive to stock, sheep especially? is a frequently asked question. Quite two-thirds of the grass growing upon the uplands this year is of this worthless variety; it is entirely unfit for feed for cattle once it is headed out, and when it ripens the heads or spears fasten themselves in the wool and hide of the animal and in many instances penetrate the vitals, causing death. A gentleman who has had a considerable experience with the above nuisance says: "If the prairie is not burned over for a year or so and then burned off in June, the nature of the grass will be entirely changed, and instead of a worthless, injurious spear grass, rich nutritious, blue-joint and blue grass will grow forth in abundance, the pest being forever obliterated. If such is the case farmers would profit much by making a combined effort to try the receipt and if possible effect the desired change.

CHEAP FOOD FOR HOGS.

Colonel Curtis, the apostle of free pasture range as the essential condition of well grown and healthy pork, gives this as his experience: "I have tried all sorts of experiments to grow cheap food for hogs, and have at last settled down upon sweet corn and peas for summer use, and roots and corn for winter, coupled with brans of different kinds. Of course pasture comes in as steady diet, and the best of this is orchard grass for the earliest green food and clover next. My order is to turn the hogs into a field of orchard grass as soon as there is any growth, and to supplement this food with some grain, more or less, according to the condition of the hogs. The old apple orchard is the early spring pasture. This has been seeded for seven years, and pastured all the time with hogs. Every year the grass is better, and the orchard grows faster and produces better fruit. It is a bother to keep the hogs rung, but it pays."

BARLEY AS GREEN FEED.

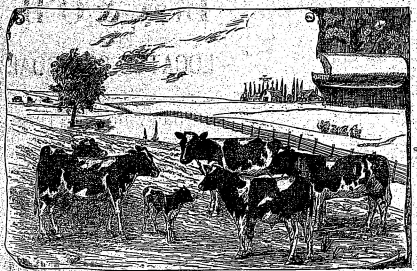
The young shoots of barley are particularly rich and succulent. They are greedily eaten by cows, and it is a good plan to sow a patch near the barn to be cut for soiling purposes. In lieu of this, barley from the field may be cut for this use. For forage barley ought to be sown much more thickly than is advisable for growing grain. At least three bushels per acre may be sown with advantage. For a grain crop two bushels is usually enough per acre.

Blue grass for pastures is being introduced all over this northwest. Stock of every description is very fond of it, and as it comes in early in the spring and remains green until the snow comes in early winter, it is no wonder that it is becoming a favorite with the farmers.

M'VICKER'S THEATRE.

Chicago Times.

"The Mountain Pink" was witnessed last evening by a large audience, and as the performance was the occasion of the dramatic debut here of Miss Laura E. Dainty, the well-known reader, it was an event of considerable interest to Chicago theatre-goers. Miss Dainty's friends accorded her a most cordial welcome and it is no small praise to say that she deserved all the applause bestowed. She played the part of Sincerity Weeks, the mountain pink, and the excellence of the performance must have been a thorough surprise to her most sanguine friends. Although accustomed to public appearance as a reader, she has been on the stage but about five months, during which time she has appeared only before rural audiences, she showed last night no traces whatever of the amateur, but on the contrary, played with perfect ease, self-possession, and confidence. She exhibited, too, a thoroughly correct conception of the character, portraying its hoydenish side with spirit, freshness and vivacity, and proving adequate, also, in the passages requiring emotional treatment. "The Mountain Pink" will appear at the Opera house, in Crookston on Friday evening, Aug. 7th 1885. Popular prices.



THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

How to Build Up a Town.

The West Merrill (Wis.) Herald give the following rules for building up a town:

Talk about it.
Write about it.
Help to improve it.
Beautify the streets.
Patronize the merchants.
Advertise in its newspapers.
Elect good men to all its offices.
Pay your taxes without grumbling.
Be courteous to strangers that come among you.
If you think of no good thing to say about it, say nothing bad.
Remember every dollar you invest in a permanent improvement is that much money at interest.
Never "kick" against any proposed necessary improvement, because it is not near your own door or for fear that your taxes will be increased 15 cents.

'ROUND HOME.

W. S. King has won in the famous King—Remington suit, a suit involving title to real estate worth a million and a half.

Mr. Knute Steenerson, mayor of the city of St. Hilaire was in on Saturday to attend the marriage ceremonies of his brother Elias.

A. J. Bigham took a tumble to himself from off the roof of his new house on Saturday of last week. He escaped without any serious injury.

Lovely weather again. Since Thursday of last week the weather has been such as to inspire hope and confidence in the hearts of the anxious farmers.

J. M. Palmer writes the JOURNAL from Angus, (card received July 31st) that "crops here have all the wet that they can possibly stand and still it rains hard every 24 hours."

Mr. Wm. Heidrich and family had a narrow escape on Sunday. They were riding when the team, becoming frightened, ran away and spilled the occupants of the carriage out. Fortunately no one was seriously injured.

The Grand Forks Plaindealer announces that it will take the morning field this week. The Plaindealer is a plucky newspaper and does not seem to fear blight nor any of the ills that tender plants are subject to. Success, neighbor.

Opinions as to the damage from the unpropitious weather are greatly mixed. Some aver big damages, while others stoutly maintain that there has as yet been no damage of any extent. We think the thresher will show considerable shortage in the general average for the Valley.

We will loan $200 for three or four months on chattel security.
[14-16] STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The Canadian government seems determined to add to the abuses they have already heaped upon their subjects in the Northwest a judicial murder, in the hanging of a reilgious crank, Louis Riel, which event is set for the 18th of next month. That's business! Hang your crazy men and let your rascals go free!

By postal from J. T. Beaudry, of Beaudry Post Office, under date of July 31st, we have the following report: "Owing to so much rain, succeeded by hot weather, our wheat is not filling properly. We shall probably get 75 per cent. of last year's crop in this town. Oats look well; not many sowed; potatoes turning white and wilting; about 50 per cent. destroyed."

Sheriff Zwickey went to St. Peter on Monday evening with Torkel K. Osse a crazy man. Mr. Knute Osse brought his son to Crookston on Monday and had him duly examined in Probate Court with the result as above. The young man was at Bjoin's office in the afternoon and was very violent. He has been crazy more or less from his birth.

H. F. Attix, writing from Mentor, under date of Aug. 1st, says: "Crops in this part of the country look hard—rusting, smutting and blighting. In one field I gathered 11 stalks in my hand and found six smutty and one blighted; balance healthy. A very poor outlook. Grass land is mostly submerged in water. Stock looking fairly well but summer packed butter is suffering from hot weather and damp cellars."

$300 to loan on good security. Short time. STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

A serious accident occurred on Sunday evening. While Henry Hennemuth and Tom McDonald were riding south along Ash street their horse in turning on the corner of Ash street and Fletcher avenue, upset the buggy and the two were thrown out upon the sidewalk. Tom escaped with a few scratches but Hennemuth struck the walk on his head rendering him insensible, from the effects of which he had not recovered on Monday night, and it is feared that he cannot live. His brother at Red Lake Falls was summoned on Monday as it was thought he had not many hours to live. LATER.—Mr. Hennemuth expired on Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock. He never recovered consciousness after the accident.

$100 to $1,000 to loan on good real estate or chattel security, for one year or less. STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The excursing passenger agents reached this city on Thursday last and were welcomed at the depot by the mayor and many prominent citizens, after which they were conveyed about the city in carriages and shown a little of what we have. They expressed surprise at what they had seen and elsewhere in their card of thanks for the kind hospitalities extended will be found their opinions of us and our city. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Warren, Albany, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. H. P. McNally, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Lawrence and daughter, Chicago; A. W. Browning and Miss Browning, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Moreland and daughter, Detroit; Wm. Abel, Milwaukee; Ed. Fishback, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. M. Huskens, Toronto, Ont.; E. G. Jaffray, DesMoines, Ia.; Ray. Allen, Harrisburg, Pa.; E. P. Allen, Albany, N. Y. They left by the night train for the north on Thursday evening, intending to go as far as Kennedy.

Mr. Levi Myers came up to see the knot tied on Saturday.

A refreshing shower on Tuesday is duly acknowledged.

The inspectors at Duluth have entered upon their duties.

Have you noticed the sign on the new wagon bridge, leading to Jerome's Addition?

Wm. Ross and Mrs. D. Jacobus, his sister, will sail on their return voyage on Saturday next. The journey will occupy about two weeks.

Binding twine is way down this year. Farmers should be thankful for small favors which, no doubt they are.

Elias Steenerson, one of Fisher's talented young business men came up to the city on Saturday evening and carried off one of our fair daughters, Miss Oleanna Ilag. The knot was securely tied by the Rev. A. C. Anderson, of Fisher, at the residence of the groom's brother Mr. Andrew Steenerson. We unite with the many friends of the happy couple in a hearty wish for a long and prosperous life for the happy pair.

From a perusal of the premium list of the State Agricultural Society handed us by Secretary Judson, we should judge that the fair to be held on the new grounds next month from the 7th to the 12th inclusive is to be one of the grandest ever attempted in the State. From other sources we learn that the display will be grand. It will pay everybody interested in agricultural pursuits to go.

On Tuesday morning at three o'clock, Geo. Mathews died at the residence of his cousin, Joseph Mathews, aged 26 years. He had been in this county for a number of years in business in this city for the most part having however, spent a year or so of the time in Argyle, Marshall Co. He was an ambitious, hard-working young man highly respected by all who knew him. His funeral on Wednesday was largely attended.

It is further recommended that all ordinary business pursuits cease in the city at one o'clock p. m. of that day, and that business remain suspended until 5 o'clock p. m. that all people of the city may participate on that day and render suitable honor to the nation's illustrious dead.

NOTICE.

Everybody is hereby cautioned not to buy a certain promissory note for $100 given by me to O. C. Rasmuson in 1880. The said note is a fraud as the property for which it was given was never delivered to me, and on demanding the note back it has been with the intent to defraud, withheld from me and tried to be disposed of. A similar notice was put in the Ada paper about two years ago by me.

A Mountain Pink.

The story of "A Mountain Pink" possesses novelty and attractiveness. It has all the elements of vitality peculiar to the popular "Western" drama, but partakes of the local colorings of the South. The scenes are laid in Black Mountain, North Carolina. Prominent among the characters are Col. Mark Trafton, a choleric gentleman of the "old school," whose high sense of honor comes from ancient lineage; Jack Weeks and Symantha, his wife, strong character-parts, chosen from among the mountain people, as the opposites of the "first families," and typical of a peculiar class; Belle Trafton, the sparkling and liberal-minded daughter of the Colodel; Harold Wilmot, a young man of birth and fortune, who is in search of a girl who was abducted when an infant, and to whom he was betrothed, while he was a lad, by the parents of himself and the missing Nondas; Felix Bonnory, Captain of the Moonshiners, a man of crime; Nondas Bonnory, daughter of the Captain, a beautiful but erring woman; Sincerity Weeks, whose native purity and simplicity has has earned for her the sobriquet of "a Mountain Pink;" Scip, a negro body-servant, who "ain't no spy on dem 'Shiners, no sah!" Opera House, Crookston, Aug. 7th. Popular prices. Box office now open.

EUCLID, Aug. 4.

Crops are generally looking well in this vicinity.

Farmers are improving this good weather putting up hay.

The M. & N. Elevator Co. have their new elevator completed and are prepared to handle the new crop.

The traveling passenger agents (whose names appear elsewhere in this issue) registered at the Keystone and after a good warm breakfast took carriages for the Keystone farm where they were welcomed by Springer Harbaugh, who showed them over the place. They were highly pleased with our village and surrounding country and their visit cannot fail to work great good. More anon. X.

The Ada Index says: "Strictly speaking, there is not a ring banded together like a gang of robbers," &c., &c.

Why not. What is the matter with the Millers' Association? Are not robbers banded together for the purpose of plunder, to make their operations more effective, and are not the Millers so banded together to make their efforts to get the wheat at cut-throat rates more effective? Do they not use the power they acquire by "banding together like robbers" to force the farmers of the Northwest to dispose of their wheat for less than the cost of production? We suppose it sounds "tough" to the honorable (?) men who compose that crowd to be called "robbers," but is it any tougher for them to hear their true name occasionally than it is for the hundreds of poor struggling farmers in the Northwest, whom by their develish schemes they have plundered, to be robbed of the results of their toil? You may call it what you like for the sake of politeness, but their robbery grinds the faces of the poor in the Northwest just as hard!

THE EXTRA SESSION.

The argument used by the Moorhead News and POLK COUNTY JOURNAL to the effect that even if an extra session was called the legislature would refuse to redistrict the State seems to us absurd. There are very few counties in the State which would suffer in representation even if the number of senators and representatives remained as at present.

* * * * *

There will be enough objections raised against the extra session without having the press of the northern part of the State put anything in its way.—[Ada Index.

We realize the importance of an extra session to the northwest providing the object sought could be gained but are we SURE it can? We know that the balance of power lies with those who oppose an extra session and is it not reasonable to suppose that the project will be fought and our object frustrated in the Legislature providing the govenor convenes it? This matter must be attended to after the U. S. census but it is optional with the Legislature to do it now or not as they choose. While it is true that the status of the south part would not change much our position would change very much and that is just what they fear. They do not intend to give up the balance of power until they are forced to and we cannot help ourselves. We may read what the verdict would be in the replies of the members of that body to the Evening Journal inquiries, and we think it policy to let well enough alone. If there was a ghost of a show for us it would be wise to incur the expense, but as there is not, we do not see the sense of adding to the burden of taxation already burdensome enough. THE JOURNAL does not oppose anything that will tend to the advancement of the interests of this great Northwest, but we do object to this expense of getting together that body of men when we can plainly see that it would be of no earthly avail. We will have to give it up, boys, and may as well do it gracefully.

RIEL CONVICTED.

The Leader of the Canadian Rebellion Found Guilty and Sentenced to be Hanged September 18th.

Pioneer Press.

REGINA, N. W. T., Special Telegram, Aug. 1.—Riel's trial concluded to-day. Four hours were occupied by the Judge reading over the evidence to the jury and charging them. He pointed out the duty of the jury to find the prisoner guilty unless thoroughly convinced that he was irresponsible and insane during the commission of his acts. The jury retired at 2:15. During their absence prisoner kneeled in the box and prayed audibly and fervently. He has scarcely eaten anything the past three days and nothing to-day. He was in the jury room during the recess to-day, sat on every one of the juror's chairs and prayed fervently on each, then sprinkled them with holy water. The jury was absent an hour and returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. The foreman cried like a child when he announced the verdict. Riel remained on his knees praying until the verdict was announced, then jumped up, looking pale, but calm.

SENTENCED TO DIE.

After the verdict was rendered Riel was asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed. He spoke two hours, showing the half-breed grievances since 1869, and asked that a commission be appointed to try him; also a commission of doctors to sit on him and see whether he was insane or not. The judge said none of the reasons offered had any weight, and advised the prisoner to prepare for the end. He then sentenced him to be hanged on the 18th of September next at Regina. Riel's counsel proclaim an intention of appealing the case at once.

NO HOPE FOR RIEL.

There is no doubt that the sentence will be executed, as Sir John Macdonald has frequently declared his intention of not interfering with the sentence, as in the Conner's murder case. He will likely swing before his counsel have an opportunity of bringing the case before the appeal courts. Sir John Macdonald will lose nothing politically by permitting the execution of the sentence. It has been contended that he would lose the support of a section of the French Canadians of Quebec if Riel is executed, but if so he will strengthen himself in Ontario by bringing to justice a man who is hated and despised through that province.

GEN. MIDDLETON,

when he was examined, took his position in the box with an air of importance, as if he were the great "I am" and everybody else was small potatoes and a few in a bill. He spoke sharply to the judge, snubbed one lawyer, told another he was talking nonsense, related how he had managed the campaign, took all the credit for the charge at Batoche and its capture, told how he had cussed his inferior officers for not obeying him at Batoche, spread on his judicious management of Riel, and finally strode out of the box with head to one side, and looking as proud as Cæsar must have felt after he had conquered Gaul. Riel's counsel, early in the trial, abandoned all efforts to cast any reflection upon the evidence of crown witnesses or seek to break it down in any way. The evidence was too direct and overwhelming, and the counsel for the defense, perceiving this, resolved to work the insanity plea for all it was worth.

A BAD CASE.

Ada Index.

Last Friday Drs. Stuart and Narum had some trouble in the latter's drug store on the West Side, during which Dr. Stuart either pushed or struck Narum so violently that he fell heavily. Dr. Narum, who was a cripple, sustained such injuries that he had to be taken to his room, where he sank rapidly, although under the care of three physicians. Death occurring Wednesday evening. Last Saturday Dr. Stuart was arrested on the charge of assault, plead guilty and was fined $25 and costs. The case terminating fatally he was arrested again on Thursday on the charge of murder, and is now in custody. A post mortem examination was held to-day by Drs. Buckley, of Fargo, Kurtz, of Moorhead, Just, of Crookston and Putnam and Koyl, the following being their report:

POST MORTEM

Held at Ada, Norman County, Minn., July 31, 1885, on Evan L. Narum, age 37. Autopsy 36 hours after death. Rigor mortis well marked. Considerable discoloration of abdomen and distension. Cademic ecchymoses very general over back of neck and most of dorsum. Froth at mouth. Head bent slightly to left and forwards. Neck enlarged on right posterior more than left. Left leg and thigh somewhat atrophied. Left knee anchylosed and bent at an angle of about 135 degrees. On turning body over on right side about 2 ounces of coffee-colored fluid ran from mouth. On removing brain no fracture of skull was found. Brain found normal in color, and general appearance. Right lateral curvature of upper part of spine was noticeable. Muscles of back and neck much congested. On section of same dark blood flowed freely. A fracture of the sixth cenical vertebre was found extending entirely through the bone. Complete anchylosis of cenical vertebre was found and partial of dorsal.

This afternoon an inquest is being held at the village hall. The jury are Chas. E. Cragin, Knut Larson, Henry Buss, S. A. Farnsworth, W. B. Sheffield and H. Harvey.

COUNTY BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

The County Board met at the Auditor's office and resolved itself into a Board of Equalization in due form, on July 20th, with M. R. Brown as chairman, and P. J. McGuire as Secretary of said board.

Decided that 4 horses and 2 cows assessed to Wm. Cunningham in Crookston, should be changed to town of Fanny. So ordered.

Assessment of Wm. Cronkshite, corrected by striking out three horses; also a similar correction in case of M. Biver and Robert Teal, all of Euclid.

July 21, 1885.

D. Jacobus objected to the valuation placed upon his electric light apparatus and explained that it was not appraised by the assessor but was placed upon the book by the city board. Laid over without action. The time until noon adjournment was taken up examining the assessment returns. Afternoon occupied same way.

July 22.

On motion the following parties were notified to appear before the Board on July 23d, at 9 a. m., viz: Felix Fournet, Rosenthal & Wile, Geo. Macdonell, W. B. Main & Co., S. F. Markham, M. Rauenbuchler and A. McKinnon. Examination of returns continued during the balance of the day.

July 23.

The parties notified to appear duly appeared and each and all protested against any special raise, insisting that their assessments were returned at as high rates as should be and no lower than seemed to them equitable and just as compared with other assessments on file with the Board.

On recommendation of P. C. Schmidt and E. A. Bradish, Messrs. Fontaine & Anglim, the Red River Lumber Co., and E. Hamery were notified to appear before the Board on Friday, July 31st, 1885, and after further examination of assessors reports, Board adjourned until Friday, July 31st, 1885.

July 31st.

Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members present. A clerical error in the assessment of C. S. Spendley was corrected.

Item 22 in the assessment of Fontaine & Anglim was stricken from the list as the entry was a clerical error.

The personal assessment of R. M. Davis was corrected by striking out seven horses that had been assessed in the town of Crookston.

Messrs. Fontaine & Anglim and E. Hamery appeared before the Board protesting against a raise in personal assessments.

The Board took the individual cases into consideration, fully discussing the same and as no grievances had been presented by any non-resident and no appeal seemed to have been made from the decisions of the town boards of review, it was decided that no special changes be made in the personal assessments of individuals; Messrs. Bradish and Schmidt voting against the motion.

The following changes were made in the valuation of buildings erected since the last general assessment, to-wit:

Lots 1 and 2, Block 1, Fletcher & Houston's Addition to Crookston raised to $1,000. Lot 7, Block 5, raised to $1,000. Lot 13, Block 3, raised to $1,000. Lots 6 and 7, Block 37, raised to $3,500. Lots 1 and 2, Block 2, South Crookston, raised to $1,000. Lots 10 and 11, Block 53, Kretzschmar's Addition to Red Lake Falls, raised to $1,800.

The water power used by Lee & Herrick, which had been omitted by the assessor, was placed on the list at $1,250, Mr. Herrick being present and consenting. The water power used by the Crookston Roller Mills having been also omitted, was placed on the list at a valuation of $1,500.

A correction in the assessment of the Terrebonne Mills property of $7,000 was made for buildings destroyed by fire since the assessment.

M. R. Brown corrected an account of double assessment of $100 stock in the Northwestern Elevator Co.

The assessment of the sw¼ sw¼ Sec. 27, Fisher, raised $150 an account of building erected since May 1, 1884.

The average value of the following classes of personal property was placed as follows:

Horses 1 year old and over	$ 19
" 2 " "	35
" 3 " "	60
Cattle 1 " "	5
" 2 " "	10
Cows	16
Other cattle 3 years old and over	20
Working oxen	35
Sheep of all ages	1.50
Hogs	2
Organs	30
Pianos	100

Household furniture was raised 25 per cent. throughout the county.

Item 26 (relating to whiskey in bond, stock and furniture of sample rooms, &c.) was raised 33⅓ per cent.

Goods and Merchandise in the city of Crookston raised 20 per cent., excepting hardware.

The assessment of farming lands becoming taxable this year was equalized to correspond with the assessment for 1884.

The personal property of K. D. Chase and Eiken Bro's and A. E. Eiken, of the city of Crookston, which had been omitted by the assessor, was duly listed and placed on the assessment roll of said city.

On motion adjourned.

P. J. McGUIRE,
Clerk of Board.

Stewart in his "Cattle Feeding," comes to the aid of the dairyman, giving a number of different rations, all well adapted to milk production, based upon an analysis of the different foods, to determine their nutritive value and digestability. We give some of them below, with the cost, which latter, however, would vary in different localities:

Ration.		Cost cents.
No. 1	10 lbs. clover hay	4
	10 lbs. straw	2
	4 lbs. linseed meal	6
	2 lbs. cotton seed meal	2 5
	4 lbs. corn meal	3
	Cost of ration	20 5
No. 2	16 lbs. meadow hay	6 4
	8 lbs. wheat bran	6
	2 lbs. linseed meal	3
	6 lbs. corn meal	5
	Cost of ration	20 4
No. 3	18 lbs. corn fodder	4 5
	8 lbs. wheat bran	6
	4 lbs. cotton seed meal	5
	4 lbs. corn meal	3
	Cost of ration	18 5
No. 4	15 lbs. straw	8
	5 lbs. hay	2
	4 lbs. cotton seed meal	3
	3 lbs. malt sprouts	2
	Cost of ration	18
No. 5	10 lbs corn fodder	2
	10 lbs oat straw	2
	2 lbs linseed meal	3
	4 lbs malt sprouts	4
	10 lbs oat and corn meal	10
	Cost of ration	19
No. 6	60 lbs. corn ensilage	7½
	5 lbs hay	2½
	2 lbs linseed meal	2¼
	4 lbs bran	3
	Cost of ration	15¼
No. 7	60 lbs clover ensilage	9
	4 lbs corn meal	4
	Cost of ration	13
No. 8	40 lbs corn ensilage	5
	40 lbs clover	6
	8 lbs bran	3
	Cost of ration	14
No. 9	40 lbs corn ensilage	5
	40 lbs clover	6
	40 lbs millet	6
	Cost of ration	17

The last three are, of course, summer rations, the clover and the millet being fed green. These tables are worth preserving by every dairyman who is not the owner of Mr. Stewart's book or some other work of equal value. Mr. Stewart says of them: "Any of these rations would produce a large flow of milk and fully keep up the condition of the cow, adding to her weight, if her live weight were not more than 1,000 pounds. All of these rations would also produce a good quality of butter in winter. The esilage rations are the cheapest and would produce the largest flow of milk." The rations of Mr. C. R. Smith's noted cow, Mink, upon which she made a record of 96 pounds, were 6 quarts of corn meal and 6 quarts of oat bran, while on pasture.

GOOD POINTS IN THE HOLSTEINS.

In the Holstein the average farmer has a cow that will give him on an average from 6 to 10 gallons of milk a day, and from 10 to 20 lbs. of butter a week. And the texture and color of the butter is first-class. After the Tri-State fair, held at Toledo, Ohio, September last, embracing the States of Ohio, Michigan and Indiana, Mr. J. W. Rogers, of Pittsfield, O., said: "I made entries of one tub of factory and one of dairy butter, made from my Holstein full bloods and grades, and the committee awarded me first prizes on both. They claimed the butter was firmer and a better grain than any other exhibitee, and there was a large show of butter of good quality from Jersey and other milk stock."

I don't deny that the Jerseys will make more butter from a given amount of milk, but the larger flow of the Holsteins will more than make up the difference, and, contrary to the generally expressed opinions, I consider this an important item in favor of the Holsteins.

The Holstein milk, containing as it does a large per cent. of casein and other solids, is still worth half the price of new milk for making cheese and feeding new stock; and will largely help toward the keeping of the cows. Calves can be fattened on skimmed Holstein milk. A high authority states that he has produced a growth of 100 lbs. per month on calves fed only on Holstein skim milk after the cream had all been taken off. It is notorious that the small amount of skimmed milk left from the light yield of the noted butter breeds is almost entirely worthless for cheese or feeding young stock.

In all the leading cheese districts of the North, notably Northern New York, Northern Pennsylvania, Northern Ohio, and a large district of Indiana and Illinois, the factorymen are introducing the Holsteins."—[C. W. Carlton, in Ohio Farmer.

CARD OF THANKS.

To Mayor Montague and the citizens of Crookston:

The Traveling Passenger Agents of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway take this means of thanking you for the very kind and hearty manner in which you welcomed them on their second trip to your beautiful city.

The drive over the city enabled us to form an estimate of the growth and prosperity you are enjoying. On all sides we noticed evidences of progress—new buildings being erected, manufacturies thriving, and merchants plying a lucrative business.

Few places indeed in the Northwest can boast of the advantages that nature has bestowed upon you. The magnificent water privileges that drive the machinery of your mills, your lumbering interests, and last, but not least, the rich and fertile country surrounding you in all directions place you in an enviable position. It is the diversity of resources that gives you the substantial growth that must bring permanent prosperity; it is this condition of affairs that is placing you in the front rank among the many thriving towns of Minnesota.

We note with pleasure, too, your many handsome private and public buildings—standing monuments of the enterprise of your people, who seem to be imbued with that spirit which brings success in a very large measure.

Again thanking you for your kindness, and wishing Crookston and her people all possible success, we are

Yours very truly,
TRAVELING PASSENGER AGENTS,
St. P., M. & M. Ry.

Crookston, July 30th, 1885.

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull,

De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. Box office open Saturday and Monday.

H. S. ATTIX.

Terrific Hailstorms.

On Friday this vicinity was visited by a terrific hailstorm, the first of the season. It had been a hot, sultry day up until the afternoon when threatening clouds appeared and it was evident that a large sized thunder and lightning storm had started for this vicinity, and appearances were not deceiving, for one of the biggest storms of the season was upon us, accompanied by rain, wind and hail. Great damage was done in a very few moments, the most serious being along the river. Of those who have lost from a trifle to all are reported: Chris Houston, a few acres; H. Steege, a few acres; Sam Greenhalgh, considerable; James Greenhalgh, Jr., all; Chris Sathre, considerable; Phil Porger, all; A. J. Kelley, serious loss; A. N. Hopkins, serious loss; J. T. Moore, 500 acres pounded into the ground; the Wyand boys considerable damage; E. O. Flanders, severe loss. There are doubtless many others of whom we have had no report as the storm went N. N. E. from here, although it is impossible to tell what it did as its course here was very erratic and zig zag—fields that were apparently directly in the track of the storm escaping without damage, while others out of line were struck. These visitants have been altogether too numerous this summer to be altogether pleasant. The Kittson County Enterprise, in its last issue, gives an account of a fearful storm on August 2d, accompanied by hail, wind and rain, destroying thousands of acres of wheat. Capt. H. W. Donaldson writes that paper in relation to his own share as follows:

"Our loss at Two River farm is fully 1,200 acres of the choicest wheat then growing in Kittson County, 400 acres of choice oats, 75 acres of choice barley, and the entire garden. Nearly the whole crop is irreparably lost. Out of 1,850 acres of grain growing I do not expect to run the reaper over more than 300 acres. I consider our loss at fully $25,000. We have been very fortunate for the last five years, not having met with any misfortunes, but at last we got a blow 'below the belt.'"

"The Silver King."

New York Music and Drama:

"The Silver King" is a strong, forcibly written and well-knit drama, full of human interest and feeling. Instead of depending as in "The World," on the stage scenery and effects (although very fine), or as in "The Lights 'o London," on the portrayal of eccentric characters, "The Silver King" relies for attractiveness on incidents which arouse human interest in the hero and his family. Everybody who sees either of the two current attractions at Wallack's and the Union Square will want to see the other, if only to note the admirable contrast between the two in constsuction and treatment. And every one who sees "The Silver King" will note the great difference of interest and feeling excited by its story from the sensations which were produced on the mind by "The World," and "Lights 'o London." Admirable as these dramas were, they do not compare in strength with "The Silver King." The piece has more material, with literary and dramatic merit, than any play for the last century.

By special request Harry Miner's Silver King Company will return and give a performance at the Opera House on Monday evening, Aug. 17th. They are all good artists. Little Winnie Shanon and Lillie Farren are grand. Box office open on Saturday and Monday. Secure your seats early.

Skating Race.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: There was a very exciting race at the rink last night between Carruth, of Crookston, and Walker, of Winnipeg. They started at the ring of the bell from opposite corners. Walker gained about 30 feet in the first few laps and both men were skating like the wind. Walker held his advantage for about six laps but the terrible strain began to tell on him and the Crookston man began to gain. The vast assemblage in the rink went wild and the cheering was great and continued until Carruth was following his man within a few feet. Watching his chance he passed him on the corner and again the loud cheering of the audience encouraged him. Walker was rattled and fell down and in a little while Carruth was at his heels again. The Winnipeg man was hot, done some swearing, but it was no use, as Carruth won the race easily by a lap and a half.

NOTICE.

Everybody is hereby cautioned not to buy a certain promissory note for $100 given by me to O. C. Rasmuson in 1880. The said note is a fraud as the property for which it was given was never delivered to me, and on demanding the note back it has been with the intent to defraud, withheld from me and tried to be disposed of. A similar notice was put in the Ada paper about two years ago by me.

THE PRIDE OF THE FARMERS.

A Glance at the Busy Scenes at the Fair Grounds, Where Six Hundred Workmen are Employed—The Exhibition Building Approaching Completion—Owners of Fine Stock and Others Taking Great Interest.

Pioneer Press August 6th.

A busy scene met the eye of a Pioneer Press reporter Saturday as he surveyed the rapidly progressing work at the State Fair grounds, where 600 toilers under an energetic management are rearing a monument to the enterprise and liberality, and weaving fresh laurels for the pride and glory of the North Star State. Order has risen out of the chaos of preparation, giving intelligible promise of the results of the next five weeks. Some of the numerous buildings are nearly finished and all have reached the point which assures the timely completion of all the contemplated arrangements by Sept. 7th, the date set for the opening of the Minnesota State fair. That the exposition will be a grand success the energy displayed by the manage and the interest developed among the stock interests of this and adjoining States leave no room for doubt. The situation of the grounds is all that could be desired, both in point of accessibility and in the extent and lay of the grounds. One of the first points that strikes a critical observer upon a survey of the two hundred acre tract is the opportunities for pleasing effects in landscape gardening. The north, east and south sides are high and undulating; the center is low; while on the west is a prominent knoll, presenting a fine view of the grounds and surrounding country. But comparatively little will be done toward laying out the grounds this year, the expense and lack of time forbidding. The projected boulevards from the two cities are as yet in an unsettled state, leaving the one good road from Hamline, the only route by carriage. The St. Paul & Northern Pacific road will establish a depot near the grounds, and the Manitoba has already entered the grounds with three tracks, at the end of which will be added a depot and turntable.

THE BUILDINGS.

Turning to the buildings, the main hall, 30x242 feet, situated near the eastern side of the grounds, fronting the St. Paul entrance, makes a striking impression upon the visitor. It is of pleasing and graceful proportions, but not imposing. Like most wooden buildings, it belongs to no particular style of architecture, though savoring somewhat of the Reaissance. It is cruciform in shape, the center being surmounted by a dome eighty feet in diameter, with 100 feet of clear space between the floor and the interior apex, and rising to the height of 150 feet from the ground to the top of the lanteen. It will be sheeted with tin and pierced at its base by sixty-four windows. No lookout will be provided, through a most magnificent view of both cities could be obtained from the top. Each wing consists of a nave and aisles, the former thirty feet in height, and lighted at the top by a continuous row of windows on each side. The aisles on each side are fifteen feet in height, with walls of brick, surrounded by a continuous row of windows, the pandrels of which consist of rough-cast plastering.

The flooring in this building is mostly laid, the windows are all in, and the dome will in a day or two, again rear its skelton shape against the sky, it having been blown over during the recent storm. Altogether it is very attractive and a success, both as to design and construction. Like the rest of the building it has been built with a view to stability and permanence. It is strongly bolted and bound together, all objectionable material eliminated, and every step in its construction has been closely watched by the architect, Mr. Brodie, of Minneapolis. A little to the north stands the machinery hall, similar in design and construction to the wings of the main exhibition hall. It is 64x128 feet in dimensions, and is now under the hands of the painters. Ranged on one side, close by, will be three machinery sheds, 54x200 feet each. In this vicinity also will stand the dairy and poultry buildings, of smaller dimensions, and planned with reference to their general uses.

FACILITIES FOR SPEEDING.

On the north side of the grounds is the center of attraction for the friends of the turf—the arena within which equine blood will win fame. The track, which will be turned over to the speeders in a day or two, is pronounced by competent judges to be one of the best in this part of the country, as far as they have yet had an opportunity to observe. It is an exact mile, sixty feet wide, drained with tile, with a slight downward grade on the home-stretch, and in construction consists of a bed of sand, topped by a foot of black soil, giving it the elasticity which is such an important requisite. Along the south side of the track, and set at a slight angle to the home-stretch, is the amphitheatre, 592x60 feet, seating capacity 15,000. It is two stories in height, with the center and end sections of three stories, and will contain seventy-four private boxes, arranged along the front of the second story. On the same side of the track and to the south, are the trotting stables, six in number, 224x72 feet each, thoroughly ventilated, containing sixteen stalls, with twelve-foot posts, and roof projecting six feet. On the south side, and to the east, are located the exhibition stock barns proper. Of these, four are for the display of horses. They are 54x144 feet, side posts 70 feet, center posts 78 feet, with 28 feet passage way. Each barn is well lighted and ventilated, and contains fifty-two stalls, the height at the head being 10 feet. The four cattle barns are 68x142 feet, posts 9 and 18 feet at side and center respectively, with a passageway of 16 feet in the center and 10 feet along the sides. Each building contains 44 double stalls, 81 feet long, well lighted and ventilated. Some distance in the rear will be found the sheds for the sheep and hogs, built like the others, in the most approved style. All the buildings are plentifully supplied with water, the water system consisting of three 50,000 gallon tanks, with windmills, connected by underground pipes with the various buildings.

THE EXHIBITS.

Probably the principal, though by no means the exclusive, interest will center on the stock exhibit, both racing and fancy. The stockmen of adjoining States have many of them expressed an intention to enter herds, some coming from Illinois, Missouri and Nebraska as well as nearer States. This feature of the exposition will be of great value to the stock interests of the State, now in their infancy. The main building, which will contain the miscellaneous exhibits will number among its attractions the displays to be made by the Omaha, St. Paul & Duluth and Minneapoles & St. Louis railway companies, and also the State exhibit which attracted so much attention at New Orleans last winter. About two-thirds of the latter will be on hand, the perishable nature of a part of it and the great cost forbidding the reproduction of the entire display. A large part of the exhibit is now stored on the grounds, and the supplementary portions will soon be on hand. The exhibit is in charge of D. E. Bailey, who was secretary of the State commission at New Orleans during the late exposition. There is some probability of the display going to the Crescent City again on the reopening of the exposition, and it will probably visit London on the occasion of the great American exposition there next year.

The principal features to appear here are Pillsbury's, Washburn's & Crosby & Co's flour exhibit, the State Fish commission's exhibit, and the newspaper, amber cane sugar and syrup, wine, educational and lumber exhibits. Many other features of smaller extent will appear, and the State's exhibit will prove one of the main attractions of the main hall. All the railroads centering in St. Paul have made a half-rate on all displays from outside the State, and will give free transportation both ways to consignments from points within the State.

PROLONGING THE LIFE OF A COW.

A writer in the Agricultural Gazette (Ireland) says the actual average life of a cow is eight years, yet her productive life may be prolonged to twenty years The best cow he owns is the 13th calf of her dam. He knows of an Ayrshire cow that gave 13 quarts of milk in a day when with her 18th calf, and when she was too old for age to be indicated by her horns. He asks in view of these and other similar instances, why are cows useless at eight years old? A cow properly cared for is then at her prime, and may compare with a man forty years old. At such an age a man has twenty years of vigorous, useful life at least before him, and by husbanding his powers ten years more may be added. A cow may just as well add six years more to her eight, and will beyond a doubt if she is well used, and still yield a better profit to her owner than a four-year-old cow. Thus the productive life of a cow may be actually doubled by good care and usage. But how is this lengthened period of usefulness to be gained? In the first place, longevity is a hereditary characteristic, and careful selection and breeding are required to secure it. Then constitutional vigor favors it. This is secured by thorough breeding and early training. The sound, healthy calf must be well cared for, well fed, and when she becomes a cow, the training and care must be continued and the cow's vital forces well nourished and husbanded. Exposure and irregular feeding not to mention actual semi-starvation during the winter season, which is far too common, tend greatly to shorten the useful and productive life of a cow. It pays better to preserve a good cow than to rear a second one, and if one lives sixteen years and has twelve productive years, she will have been worth more to her owner in the end than three cows eight years old would have been; for there will be ten fully productive years in the old cow's life against ten partially productive years in that of the young ones.

We have received from the publishers a copy of a new and handsome publication called Youth, evidently a high-class periodical, and intended for the entertainment and profit of boys and girls, and the older ones of the family as well.

The first article is a story, continued, in which it is not difficult to recognize the terseness, humor and cleanliness of one of the best writers of short fiction and essays in this country, the "Deane Monahan" of a dozen years ago, who has undertaken the editorship of Youth. All the articles published in this number show the exercise of taste, care, and a due regard for that cleanly tone and style that we want in the family circle. We notice that there is no attempt at coarse and doubtful humor, and that curious and useful odds and ends of history and information, grouped under appropriate heads, appear from all corners of the world.

The price at which Youth is supplied (fifty cents per annum, with club rates) is a new departure in journalism. It is evident that the paper intends to gather a large circulation, with a very small profit on each individual subscriber. This is the plan that has long been wanted to place in the hands of families a publication that can be afforded by everybody, yet of the most desirable quality.

"Peterson's Magazine" for September opens with a very beautiful steel-engraving, from a picture in the last Paris salon, "The Drink at the Spring," but contains, in addition, a mammoth colored fashion-plate, besides some fifty other illustrations, chiefly for the fashions, the work-table, etc., etc. The stories are remarkably good, even for "Peterson." Notably among them are: "Thimble," "A Long Half-Hour," "The Passway of Peril," and a powerfully interesting novelet by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, the sequel to "The Motherless Girl." That inimitable writer, the author of "Josiah Allen's Wife," also contributes the first part of a sketch, "How the World was Burnt Up," the conclusion of which is to appear in the next number, and which will be anxiously awaited. We cannot recommend this magazine too highly. It seems, to us, to fulfil all the requirements of a lady's book, and at a price that places it within the reach of all—viz: two dollars a year for a single copy, with great reductions to clubs: it is, by all odds, the cheapest and best. Specimens are sent gratis, if written for, to those really wishing to subscribe. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"What is the best thing for potato bugs?" asks a rural subscriber. Up to the hour of going to press nothing has been found more satisfactory than potatoes.

Wet hay put in the stack or mow to equalize with the dry may be called the wisdom of fools. It is a bad sort of ensilage while yet wet, and dry is worth just so much manure.

It is said that 955 farms in Iowa are owned by women, and that twenty dairy farms are managed by women. There are 122 women physicians and five women attorneys at law in the State.

Prof. M S. Kern, of Columbia, Mo., a landscape gardener of high ability and a writer on rural art and taste, has been appointed forestry agent of the department of agriculture at Washington.

THE SALOON.

New York Tribune.

The saloon is an insritution which makes the poor poorer continually. If only half the annual expenditure of the wage-earnings classes upon drink were saved, the elevation of those classes would proceed by leaps and bounds. The saloon, however, is ever lying in wait for the weak or the social wage earner. In this great city, on any of the main avenues, he cannot walk a block without passing a manufactory of misery. At every turn the purveyor of drink entices him, gets him between him and his family, between him and his manhood, between him and his happiness. The pervading influence of rum pursues the slaves of appetite unceasingly, and makes their lives a constant struggle or a succession of disastrous falls. This subtle prevalent influence is the bitterest curse that rests upon modern civilization, and it will destroy civilization if it is not itself destroyed. For the discontent, the anarchic tendencies, the seditious doctrines, the dangerous dispositions that are manifesting in centers of population, together with the vices of administration which alarm the thoughtful, and the difficulties in the way of reform which are due to the intractibility of the material dealt with—all have their spring and origin in that habit of drinking, that potent drink influence, which baffles the enthusiasm of the reformer and laughs to scorn the appeals of religion, of reason and of self-respect. This evil influence is degrading and brutalizing society, and progress will be slow and unsatisfactory until a public opinion is formed which refuses to palter with the abuse longer.

The above is an article from one of the leading journals in the land,

NOTE CAREFULLY WHAT IT SAYS,

then decide for yourself if it is right. If you say it is, then tell us why you wish to keep such arch-enemies alive. It says, "unless this traffic is itself destroyed it will destroy civilization." The editor sees the enormity of this traffic. He does not talk of regulating it, but says "a public opinion must be formed that shall refuse to palter with the abuse longer." Does the editor not clearly show that prohibition must be the issue?

Yet prohibitionists are called fools, fanatics, &c., for doing just what this editor says must be done in order to save our country.

Well, it is easy to cry fools and fanatics, but those are not arguments and will not count much in this age of reason and fair play. Besides, that cry has gone up against every reformer and inventor since the world stood, yet the world goes on.

When Columbus first proposed to reach the east by sailing west, wise men laughed and said it was preposterous. Again, when it was first proposed to send a steamer across the Atlantic, those whose minds were disturbed by the project, said it was impossible. No steamer could ever be built that would carry fuel enough for the trip from England to America.

Now, to those whose minds are disturbed by the project of prohibition let me say: Just wait a little. The people are just beginning to wake up, and we are ringing the bell. When the people are thoroughly awakened, then let those who have ROBBED them, look out.

The cry is constantly going up that prohibition is a failure in Iowa, Maine and Kansas, that more liquor is consumed than before the law went into effect; that all it does is to deprive the State of the revenue. Well, if that is true, why don't the saloon keepers go in for prohibition? Why all this cry about the Iowa prohibitory law?

But it is not true that prohibition is a failure! It does prohibit, as well as can be expected under the circumstances.

The brewers and distillers statistics say that the only States where their traffic has fallen off is where they have absolute prohibition.

But is license a success, high or low? Can any one tell where this traffic was ever successfully regulated? Does the customer care what the saloon keeper pays for his license? I think not. The whole license business is a fraud and an abomination before God. It is simply a permit to license crime, pauperism, suicide and social disorder, and so long as this traffic is licensed, it is not one straw in the interest of temperance, whether the license is high or low, and there is no consistency in temperance men praying for temperance, denouncing the saloon keeper and the traffic for which they grant him the license to sell.

Oh, Consistency, thou art a jewel!

D. 1883, at 2:45 o'clock in the afternoon, in book "M" of mortgages, on pages 54 to 57, that said mortgage conveyed the hereinafter described premises to secure the payment of four hundred ($400.00-100) dollars, in five years from its date, and the interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum, per annum, payable semi-annually, that default has been made in the payment of interest on said principal sum, wherefore, as authorized by the conditions of said mortgage the mortgagee therein, has elected to declare and does hereby declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage, together with the interest thereon accrued, due and payable immediately, that there is hereby claimed to be due on said mortgage debt the sum of four hundred ninty-five ($495.00-100) dollars, that no action, or proceeding, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, that said mortgaged premises are situate in Polk County, Minnesota, and are described as follows, viz: The fractional southwest quarter (sw¼,) of Section six (6,) in Township one hundred and fifty-three (153,) of Range forty-five (45.)

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by reason of said default in the conditions of said mortgage, and by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said described mortgaged premises, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the twenty-ninth day of August A. HOLSTEIN CATTLE.

Farmers Advocate.

From a paper read before the eleventh annual meeting of the Iowa Improved Stock Breeders' Association, by Thos. B. Wales, Jr., of Iowa City, the following extract is taken:

"The cow, Echo H. B. has made in three hundred and sixty-five days, 23,775 pounds, 8 ounces; Violet, 28,677 pounds, 4 ounces; Aggie, 18,001 pounds, 15 ounces; and others nearly or quite as great. The monthly milk records have been as high as 2,023 pounds, by Jantje, [2221]; 17,756 pounds, 2 ounces, has been made by a two-year-old, owned by Yeomans & Sons, of New York, and 2,062 pounds and 6 ounces, by a two-year-old in Iowa, and 74 pounds and 8 ounces, in twenty-four hours by the same heifer owned by myself. No one questions that the Holsteins as a breed are the greatest of all milkers. Next let us look at them as butter producers. It has been found that the milk of the Holsteins yield large per centages of butter, and what is equally gratifying, that is quality is not only very superior, but that it has better qualities than any other. Holstein butter has for two years received the first prize at the New York State Fair, and this year the sweepstakes prize was awarded to Holstein butter at the Iowa State Fair. Col. Littler will tell you that when he went to Europe with the butter display from the United States, and where he won so much glory for Iowa, the only butter he could not beat, was butter from Holland, where our Holsteins come from. In Friesland, the first interest of the farmers is his butter, and has been for many hundred years."

DOES IT PAY?

It is the one deep-rooted heresy that possesses the dairy farmer of the whole land—that liberal or high feeding does not cover its own cost—when it is the only thing that will give dairy farmers day wages for their toil, to help them from bankruptcy.—[American Dairyman.

Truer words were never spoken and yet, if a farmer is asked to show why he thinks generous feeding does not pay, not one time in a thousand will he be able to show you from experience, that he has the figures for what he believes. The fact is, our knowledge of dairy and cattle management is very crude. It is a line of effort that calls for a close record in order to thoroughly know what we think we know. The men who engage in it have never been accustomed to the keeping of records, or figuring results to a fine point. When they have wasted time and money enough to have made them rich, they will probably institute a reform in this particular. The better way is slowly making progress however. In every dairy community can be found a few dairymen who are students in their business, and who are applying sound business methods to the same. They recognize the botton truth that they, are, in fact and deed, manufacturers and that no manufacturer can afford to go along without a clear understanding of what his goods cost him, whether the machine that he works with is paying a profit on what it costs to run it, and whether it is fed sufficiently to bring out its full capacity. The cow is a living machine—more complex and wonderful than any human invention. Does it stand to reason that an ignorant man who has studied but little, and read less, concerning her, should do successful and profitable work with her? Mr. J. G. Flack, of Elkhorn, Wis., makes his dairy of 27 cows pay him an annual profit of $40.00 a head. He has neighbors who don't get an annual profit from their cows of even $20.00, and ten to one no living man can convince those neighbors that they, and they alone, are to blame for their lack of success. They know, in reality, but little about profitable dairy management. They have lived within sight of Mr. Flack for years; they have seen him get rich managing as he does, but still they say "it don't pay." If he fills his house with dairy reading and spends considerable time studying what other men have to say they still remark "it don't pay." If he attends conventions, where a large number of the best posted men in the business come together, still they say "it don't pay." If he is not satisfied with common native cows and introduces a strain of Jersey blood so he can get more butter from the same outlay of feed, they repeat, "it don't pay." If he buys mill stuffs and feeds his cows all they can digest of good feed, they still say "it don't pay. If he is sure to cut his hay from 10 to 20 days earlier than they do, in order to secure a better butter producing forage, still they claim "it don't pay." And so it goes clear through the chapter.

Mr. Flack, makes money and they don't; still they say his methods "don't pay." Every community in the northwest has its Flack, its Fowler, its Gurler, its Smith, or Curtis, and yet the very methods these men have instituted for their own education are the secret of their success. Unlike the great body of men about them, they believe that it is the man that makes the business, so they have gone at work at themselves first. They did not despise knowledge, nor begrudge the little expense of getting knowledge. What do you think neighbors—does it pay?

FARM NOTES.

Pioneer Press,

WEEDS IN GRAIN CROPS.

Not long ago a good farmer, referring to a wheat field belonging to a slovenly neighbor living opposite, remarked: "That field has not had in twenty years a crop which I would take as a gift, if obliged to bring and thresh on my side of the road. Every crop has been so filled with weed seeds that it would only curse any decent farmer's land to bring them on it." Yet twenty years ago this land was comparatively free from weeds. The fact shows how quickly and certainly the value of land will decline if weeds are neglected and allowed to seed.

HELP IN HARVESTING.

Next to the best labor-saving machinery the essential point in successful harvesting of crops is to have an abundance of good help. In catching weather the saving by hurrying in crops before injury by rain will save many times the wages required by needed help. It should be remarked that nothing is gained by delaying cutting so as to escape rain. The farmer who protracts haying and harvesting two or three weeks longer than he needs, not only loses part of the crop, but is sure to get all the bad weather that falls to his neighborhood during the summer.

SOWING GRASS SEED IN AUGUST.

If a crop of hay is desired next year from land now bare, no time should be lost in setting a mellow seed bed two or three inches deep and preparing to sow grass seed early in August. We usually have more or less catching weather in harvest time which is sufficient to make newly plowed land moist. Frequent cultivation will keep it so. But where the grain succeeds, winter wheat or rye will probably, in most cases, prove a more profitable crop than grass alone. The grass seed may be sown with the grain in the fall or a little later, and will make a good sod the second season.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

There is abundant proof, says the Ohio Farmer, from practical experience, careful experiments and scientific investigations, that cooked food is more nutritious and more palatable for any live stock than uncooked.

Many horses have the habit of sleeping standing up. It is a very injurious habit, and the horse should be broken of it if possible. The narrow stalls in which horses are often placed makes a recumbent position very difficult. It is cruelty to the animal to place him in such a stall after doing a hard day's work.

Perfectly dry soil will absorb from 15 to 50 per cent of moisture—sand the lesser, and clay the greater quality. The amount of water required to sink to a given depth will therefore be easily estimated when we reflect that an inch of water, evenly distributed over an acre, weighs nearly 113¼ tons.

Within a few years sheep husbandry has declined in France to the extent, as reported, of 11,000,000 head. The French, however, import about 14,000 mutton sheep for consumption weekly, and live mutton sheep sell higher than live weight cattle. The mutton supply comes chiefly from Germany, Eastern Europe and Algeria.

A census of successful farmers would not include many of the class that change from one branch of agriculture to another whenever the price of their product is unsatisfactory. The change brings a double loss—a sacrifice in the stock sold and loss in the high price paid for the new class of stock purchased

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, wil' be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.—Rural World.

Crookston, August 20, 1885.

ROUND HOME.

Splendid nights for buggy rides, these.

Sash and doors, all sizes at Stewart & Laurence.

Mr. G. W. Lewis has returned from a pleasant visit below.

Ed. Barrette and A. Dufresne have gone to Montreal on a visit.

The Silver King was not well liked on its return show, Monday evening.

Miss Alice Van Dyke arrived last week on a visit to her brother, Dr. M. Van Dyke.

The Hessian fly has appeared in Clay County and is reported to have done much damage.

J. B. Berthiaume has gone to Chicago for more goods. He expects to be away about three weeks.

Mrs. Bazille and daughter, of St. Paul, are visiting friends in the city, the guests of Mrs. E. M. Walsh.

Wm. Van Dyke, son of J. W. Van Dyke of Alexandria, has come to study medicine with his uncle, Dr. M. Van Dyke.

Dr. L. B. Tooly and lady returned on Monday from a lengthy visit to friends in New York. The doctor looks as fat as a fool.

Frank Roome's team took a lively spin last Saturday. Aside from breaking the buggy somewhat no damage was done.

Machine oils, linseed oil, rubber and leather belting, rubber hose, packing, etc., at bottom prices, Stewart & Laurence.

There will be a union temperance meeting in the Congregational church next Sunday evening, no services in any of the other churches.

A pleasant social party was given at Fortier's Hall on Tuesday evening in honor of Miss Emma Langevin, of St. Paul. It was a most enjoyable party.

R. C. Brophy, a glyndon old-timer gave us a pleaspnt call on Tuesday. He represents the Lenham Elevator Co., whose ad appears elsewhere in this issue. This is a thoroughly reliable company.

J. E. Mitton was over from Park River, D. T., this week. He has a large hotel at that point and is doing first-class. J. E. knows how to keep hotel and with half a chance will do well anywhere.

During a recent storm, Mr. C. H. Bruce had three cows killed by lightning in a singular manner. There were six cows in the stable and a man was milking one. Every alternate cow in the stable was killed and the man uninjured save a shock.

The firm of G. S. Barnes & Co., whose card may be found elsewhere in this issue is one of the oldest in the wheat business in the Northwest. Shippers need have no fears in making consignments to them as they are perfectly reliable and responsible.

Mr. G. W. Lewis has purchased the C. A. Chiniquy residence on the avenue. He has now the handsomest house and grounds in the city, to our notion, by all odds. We are glad the old gentleman has secured so delightful a residence in his old age. He well deserves it and will take great comfort there.

Quite a runaway occurred on Second street on Tuesday. A horse, attached to a democrat wagon, in which were two ladies, took a lively spin up the street, running on the sidewalk near Potter & George's drug store the ladies were pitched out. Save a few serious bruises the ladies were not seriously injured.

E. M. Walsh and W. F. Zwickey have bought Terryll's liquid slating business and will now proceed to blacken the fair fame of the great Northwest in good shape. Terryll & Miller did about $2,000 worth of business during the short time they were here and everybody who used the stuff seems to be well satisfied with it. The boys have got a bonanza.

A great hue and cry has gone abroad to the effect that we are all drowned out in Polk Co.—too wet and soft to cut wheat with machines—must rock the cradle over all of it. This would be bad if true. While it is true that there is some wet land, a little that will have to be cradled in spots this does not apply as a rule. We are told that Mr. E. D. Childs will use 30 or 40 cradles and that aside from this there has been sold from 80 to 100 in this city. If the grain in Polk County all had to be cradled it would require over 100 times that number to cut it. As a rule the harvester will do its usual work, as the exception it will not.

Elsewhere will be seen Mr. Knuppe's invitation to everybody to aid in getting a grand display for the State fair. If we care a cent about having men of capital come in to settle among us we will heed this invitation and will roll up a better showing for Polk Co., than she ever had before, for we have the grains and vegetables with which to do so. It is at these big State fairs that capitalists are attracted to a locality by the character of its displays. If every farmer in the county felt the true importance of making such a display as we can Polk Co. would make the most creditable display on the grounds. A very little effort is requested. Will it be put forth?

The hum of the reaper is heard in the land. Thousands of acres of wheat will go into the shock this week and next week will doubtless see it all there. The yield for the county will be reduced at least 50 per cent. from its first promises, but what we do save will be universally, we think, No. 1 Hard.

Elsewhere will be seen the card of Christianson & Milgaard, two Fargo gentlemen who have opened up a loan office in our city. Mr. Christianson is a Polk County old-timer and needs no introduction. Everybody who knows him knows that his word is as good as gold and that everything he says he will do will be done as promised. The boys will no doubt do well here.

Dept. Register of Deeds, Clark Van Housen, has gone for a visit with the old folks at home in old Steuben Co., N. Y. If any of the boys, by a faithful discharge of his duties has well earned a bit of a respite, Clark has, for he has been one of the most faithful, and Register Paterson says it is like losing his right hand to have Clark gone. May he well enjoy his visit and return refreshed for his labors.

A Little Anecdote.

A good looking young couple took a pleasant ride in the country on Saturday evening. It was in the gloaming—and a top buggy. They rode north. Pretty soon, when the gloaming had become somewhat more gloamy—a good looking horse came into the city from the north quite hurriedly. He had a pair of shafts, two wheels and a colt at home. Hence the haste. The top, the box, the afterwards wheels and the young couple not arriving on that run an extra was sent out post haste which in due time came in reporting everything serene. MORAL. It is always better to take the colt along than to return so suddenly after it.

Elsewhere will be found the new ad. of the Lenham Elevator Co. To give our readers an idea of what they mean to do we quote from their circular as follows:

DULUTH, Minn., May 1, 1885.

We solicit consignments of grain shipped from any locality to Duluth or Minneapolis. Country shippers will find us protecting their interests in either market, and can rely on getting the best grade and price for the grain sold through us. Our own purchases at the stations where we operate elevators, enables us to control large receipts thus securing for our house direct orders from millers and others at the top of the market. Any grain consigned to us will be received strictly on commission; our rates will be as low as that accepted by any responsible house.

We shall have competent private inspectors to follow every car, to see that we get the correct grade and weight. The State inspector's report will be duplicated and mailed to the shipper, on all cars; this will be a new order of affairs which we shall introduce. The report when received will enable you to know the reason why your wheat has not graded one hard, if it should happen to be reported below that standard.

Upon the receipt of samples of grain, we will quote the price you can sell the same at on delivery in cars.

Liberal cash advances made on consignments, and prompt account sales rendered. Parties desiring to store and hold wheat, and borrow money upon it, can do so through us at the lowest rates.

We shall handle wheat, oats, barley, corn, and all kinds of grain.

We believe we know how to give satisfaction to the "country shipper," and respectfully solicit a trial.

LENHAM ELEVATOR CO.

Euclid Items.

EUCLID, Aug. 11, 1885.

Farmers have commenced harvesting in this vicinity.

The Ladies' Aid Society will give an ice cream sociable at the church tomorrow evening. All invited.

Charlie Schcay returned home Saturday from a visit to his old home in Wisconsin.

Mr. Elwood and family, of Grand Forks, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Curry.

Mr. H. C. Misner is building an addition to his residence.

E. C. Murray has purchased a lot of M. P. Losey and is putting up a blacksmith shop.

Mr. McGrew and wife were up from Crookston on Friday last. They seemed well pleased with our thriving little town.

The Keystone Farming Co., on Saturday last, received a carload of binders to be used this season on their farm.

The entertainment given by the Euclid amateur minstrels, Friday evening last, was in every way a grand success. The large dining room of the Keystone House was crowded, and for a time everyone forgot the rainy weather and the note coming due in the fall, and partook of a free and easy laugh.

Mr. Geo. Harris, of Warren, came down Friday evening to take in the minstrel show.

Harvester experts are almost as numerous as mosquitoes, and mosquitoes are awful.

NOTICE.

Everybody is hereby cautioned not to buy a certain promissory note for $100 given by me to O. C. Rasmuson in 1880. The said note is a fraud as the property for which it was given was never delivered to me, and on demanding the note back it has been with the intent to defraud, withheld from me and tried to be disposed of. A similar notice was put in the Ada paper about two years ago by me.

There seems to be some good in the farmers law, if we may judge by the number of grain firms advertising to handle wheat. This suggests that it would be well for farmers to ship their own wheat unless their home market affords just as good prices. We notice that the elevator charges at Duluth have been reduced from 2¼ to 1¼ cents which augurs well for a starter. Now, if those who buy wheat here will not give satisfactory grades and prices then the farmer should ship his wheat to some trustworthy firm at Duluth. As it is necessary for the shipper to load his car within 24 hours it would seem like but few could ship their own wheat but why could not several farmers combine to help each other? This could be done and would prove mutually beneficial. In some cases, storage room in the city could be had for a carload or two at a time. There are many ways in which one could manage to ship his wheat to Duluth if this proves the better way and our merchants and business men are so directly interested in seeing the farmer get the highest price for his wheat that many of them could provide the way to good advantage. Some would find it to their advantage to put up a small warehouse from which to ship wheat for their customers. The prospects certainly seem better this fall in this particular at least, the privilege of every man being his own shipper. He cannot now say that there is no way of escape for him.

Poisoned by Canned Salmon.

Fargo Argus.

A family at Davenport, Ia., named Hollon, composed of husband, wife and four children, partook of canned salmon for breakfast, and in a few hours all were taken sick, four of them seriously, while two were critical at a late hour to-night. The symptoms are retching, purging, vomiting, a burning sensation, and in the case of a boy 11 years old, the convulsions. The salmon was taken from the can at 6 o'clock last evening and placed in a china bowl. The doctors who examined the fish this evening found well developed traces of bacteria. This not accounting for all the symptoms of the disease, a further examination showed that arsenic had been used, probably in the solder, and it was also found that the inside of the can had begun to rust.

HOLSTEIN FRIESIANS.

By the kindness of T. G. Yeomans & Sons we are able to present our readers with the record of "Aaggie 2d," one of their fine herd of Holstein Friesians. This noted breed is bound to take the lead of all others in the production of beef, milk and butter:

AAGGIE 2D.

(H. H. B., No. 1,360.) This remarkable Holstein Friesian heifer (imported by us when a calf) made the following wonderful records, which have never been equaled by any two-year-old, viz.:

17,740 lbs, 2 oz. milk in one year.

13 lbs. 6 oz. butter in one week, when 8½ months in milk.

11 lbs. 3 oz. butter in one week, when 10 1-5 months in milk.

Indicating an average of 640 lbs. butter in one year.

At 5 years 9½ months, she again comes to the front with the largest butter record ever reported of any cow of any breed for some length of time.

Beginning her record during the extremely cold weather in February, she made;

11 lbs,	12	oz.	butter	in	3	days.
15 "	6	"	"	"	4	"
26 "	7	"	"	"	7	"
105 "	10½	"	"	"	30	"
207 "	3¼	"	"	"	60	"
304 "	5¼	"	"	"	90	"

The average for the entire 90 days, is 1 lb. butter from 20.74 lbs. milk.

The butter was thoroughly washed with water in the churn, then taken taken out in granular form and well worked into a solid mass, and weighed before salting.

Her weight at date of making this record was 1,235 lbs.

Her daughter, Aaggie 3d, at 2 years 8 months, made 19 lbs. 1 oz. butter in a week.

COPP'S SETTLER'S GUIDE.

Henry N. Copp, the Land Lawyer of Washington, D. C., sends the ninth edition of Copp's Settler's Guide, an indespensable book to all who are interested in public land. A chapter, illustrated with numerous cuts, shows how to tell Township, Section and Quarter Section Corners, and explains the system of Government Surveying. It gives the latest rulings and instructions under the Homestead, Preemption, Timber culture, Desert Land, and other laws. The price of the book is only 25 cents.

It will tell you who is entitled to enter land; how continuous your residence must be; what improvements you must make; what affidavits you must swear to; all about contests, and on what grounds they can be commenced; also about State Lands, Stone and Timber Lands, Mineral Lands, Desert Entries, Saline, Railroad, Coal, Townsite, and other lands; Scrip, Warrant, and other entries. Its purchase will save money and trouble, as erroneous statements circulated by conversation among settlers may, if acted on, cost you a contest, perhaps your land and improvements.

The State Fair. Notice to Farmers!

Crookston, Minn., August 17th, 1885.

Dear Sir:

You have undoubtedly seen in the papers that this year will be the first time that the State Fair is held on its own grounds, between St. Paul and Minneapolis, devoted exclusively to annual exhibitions. Very large permanent buildings have been put up and the contributions from various States as to blooded stock, etc., warrant the supposition that this Fair will offer attractions never before attempted. As a result, an immense concourse of people from neighboring States is expected, and a number of railroads are making unusual efforts for a grand display. In order to counteract the exaggerated and damaging reports circulated by rival interests in regard to our rainy season to the effect that no good crops can be raised in POLK, MARSHALL or KITTSON Counties in a wet season like this, it is the intention of the Land Commissioner to add to the display of this Railroad as a special feature an EXHIBIT OF THE PRODUCTS OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY, ALL BY ITSELF.

I have been instructed to solicit contributions for this purpose. Will you kindly assist me in carrying out the program? If the farmers in the Red River Valley will contribute a little of the best their farms produce we can get up an exhibit that will astonish the people and will demonstrate beyond a doubt, that, FIRST, we can raise good crops if we do have as much rain as would ruin the crops in any other country, and, SECOND, that if we can get up a show like this, after so much rain, the products of THE RED RIVER VALLEY in any ordinary kind of season, can

BEAT THE BALANCE OF THE WORLD STONE BLIND.

The crop of '83 has shown how much drouth the soil can stand, the crop of '85 will show that the soil can absorb more water than any other country. The farmers of the Red River Valley can furnish the proof at the coming State Fair if they want to. Will you help me do it?

What is Wanted for the Exhibition.

Samples of wheat, oats, barley and rye, pulled up by the roots, selecting long, clean straw with long heads, in bundles about six inches in diameter. Grain pulled up by the roots is preferred; if the grain is cut the bundles to be four to six inches in diameter. We also want to exhibit flax, wild and tame grasses. (GRASSES ARE VERY EARNESTLY SOLICITED.) Also vegetables of all kinds, corn in the ear or stalk, wild fruits; in short anything that will show up well.

Contributors are requested to mark their exhibits with their NAME and POST OFFICE, or the name of the nearest station on the Railroad, and to leave them with the nearest station agent who will take care of them until they are collected.

Farmers near EAST GRAND FORKS may leave their samples at the house of Mr. W. C. Nash.

People in the vicinity of CROOKSTON will please call with their samples at my office over the Merchants' National Bank. I have provided a storage room near the station.

For the collection of the contributions I shall visit the following places with a special baggage car at the dates named. You are requested to bring your samples NOT LATER THAN THE DAY PREVIOUS: Samples will be received any time between now and that day except Sunday. The car will be

At ST. HILAIRE—Saturday, August 29th.

At EAST GRAND FORKS AND FISHER—Monday, August 31st.

At HALLOCK, KENNEDY, STEPHEN, ARGYLE, WARREN, ANGUS, EUCLID, BELTRAMI AND ROLETTE, on Wednesday, September 2d, and will go from Rolette with the passenger train to St. Paul and thence to the Fair grounds.

People in the vicinity of Crookston will please deposit their contributions any time before the 1st day of September.

In conclusion, I will say that if you will devote a little time to select and contribute some nice samples of the best productions of your farm we can make an exhibit which will do the Red River Valley more good, and will counteract the unfavorable reports of rival interests far better than thousands of dollars spent in advertising pamphlets. Will you help me to get up a big show?

Yours very truly,
JOHN KNUPPE,
Gen'l agent of the St. P. M. & M. Land Department for Polk, Marshall and Kittson Counties.

The station agents are supplied with labels to mark your exhibits. Please show this to your neighbors who did not receive a circular. Let us all pull together.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Ada Index: Four weeks ago Wednesday a stranger drove up to Andrew Anderson's place in the town of Lake Ida, six miles east of town, with a team of horses, one gray and one black, and a two-seated buggy. He informed Anderson that he was going to Crookston to hunt up land and made arrangements to leave the team at Anderson's place for three days while he was gone, agreeing to pay $4 for his trouble. He paid $2 in cash and then left. He was afterwards seen in Ada, but has not since been heard from. The team has been left with Campbell & Barnes. These is some mystery connected with the affair.

DIGEST OF LAND DECISIONS!

By the Commissioner of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior, prepared and reported semi-monthly for the Polk County Journal by Archibald Young, Attorney at Law and late Examiner of Mining, Railroad, Homestead, Pre-emption and other contest cases in General Land Office. Office 637 F. St., Washington, D. C.

PRACTICE.

Any qualified person who has complied with the conditions of the 2d Section Act of May 14th, 1880 is entitled to the preference right of entry (Duprat vs. Erving Acting Sec'ry July 11th, 1885.

PREEMPSIONS.

A settlement or filing made for the benefit of another is illegal, and the rescission of the agreement under which the claim was initiated does not give it validity or confer upon claimant rights which she did not theretofore possess. (LaBolt vs. Robinson, Sec'y April 21st, 1885.) 2d claimants right of entry is not exhausted by filing upon land not properly subject thereto. (Exparte Brown, Act. Sec. July 2d, '85.)

HOMESTEADS.

Purchase under 2d Sec. Act of June 15th, 1880 may be made after cancellation of entry, or at any time prior to final judgment in favor of a contestant in the absence of a valid adverse claim. (Simpson vs. Foley Acting Secr'y, July 11th, 1885.)

MINERALS.

Certificate of Surveyor General as to the $500 expenditure must be filed before the expiration of period of publication. (Expart Weil, Acting Secr'y, July 9th, 1885.)

RAILROADS.

The grant to this Co. did not become effective until the map designating line of the road was filed in General Land Office, and the depositing of such a map in office of the Secretary cannot be construed as a filing in Comr's office. (Atlantic & Pacific R. R. Co. Com'r. July 31st, 1885.)

2d. Land covered by a Pre. claim at date of filing map of definite location of road is excepted from the grant. (Union Pacific R. R. Co., Kansas Div. Com'r. July 25th, 1885.)

3d. Indemnity selection must be made from vacant land in the indemnity limit nearest the lost tract, and the land forming the basis for the selection must be specified. Where indemnity selections have heretofore been made without specifying the losses, the companies will be required to designate the deficiencies for which such indemnity is to be applied before further selections will be allowed. (Circular Aug. 4th, 1885.)

TOWNSITE.

Land within the granted limits of the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. Co., can only be entered for townsite purpose at $2.50 per acre. (Townsite of Kingmann, Com'r. July 29th, 1885.)

RESULTS OF TESTING COWS.

Western Stock Raisers' Journal.

We notice with regret that the cows producing the greatest milk records have come to an early demise, and are compelled to believe that the heavy pressure put upon them during the period of tests, was the prime cause. Cows cannot endure long sieges of gorging without great injury to their constitutions and general usefulness. You may bring out a month's yield of milk in a single week, but the strain on the animal is far more injurious than a year of steady and regular milking. A man can do a week's work in one day but he cannot rid himself of the effects in six months. You may strain every muscle in a noble animal, but by so doing you must suffer the inevitable results. Feed your cows good, substantial, milk-producing food, and make such milk tests as will last year in and year out. No cow can long produce 70 to 90 pounds of milk a day, and when you try to make them do it the consequences soon follow. Upon this same subject the London Live Stock Journal says: "The ardor with which farmers in America compete to beat the highest record at the milk-pail is likely to cool somewhat suddenly. An exchange points out that every few days the death is chronicled of some noted butter or milk producing cow. The cause of death is attributed to milk-fever, but the truth is they are pampered and gorged and put to high pressure until the next that is heard is—the cow is dead. What is wanted are cows that will give, not the largest production of milk and butter regardless of cost, but the largest production in comparison to the food consumed, or a yield that shall show the largest profit in its production."

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of seven hundred and seventy-two and 80-100 dollars, ($772.80-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Louis A. Genereux, unmarried to Lauretta M. Boies, bearing date the 11th day of March A. D. 1884, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1884, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 44 and 47, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for $700 bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 11th day of March 1889, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year according to the terms of said note with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that past due interest thereon should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date said interest became due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-seven dollars, ($37,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Leonard Beauchaine, an unmarried man, to John Cromb, bearing date the 4th day of September A. D. 1883, aforesaid, to secure the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1500.00,) and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, therein mentioned, whereby he did grant, bargain, sell and convey to the said Louis Berthiaume, his heirs and assigns, the following described premises and real estate, situate in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to wit: Lots one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three and twenty-four in block five—being all of block five—in Bottineau's Addition to Red Lake Falls, according to the plat thereof on file in the office of the Register of Deeds of said Polk County, which said indenture of mortgage duly acknowledged, was on the 16th day of August, A. COMBINE TO SELL WHEAT.

Farm, Stock and Home.

In our last issue we suggested to the farmers of Minnesota that the only way for them to reap any benefit from the new State grading and warehouse law, was to effect neighborhood combinations and ship their grain in car lots to terminal points. The individual can, of course, obtain the same benefit as the combination if he is so situated that he can load a car within twenty-four hours of the time it is left at his station for him; but a very small percentage of the wheat growers are so situated, therefore the necessity of combining with his neighbors so that the requsite amount of wheat can be moved in the required time.

We want to see hundreds of these combinations made, and a large part of the wheat of Minnesota marketed at terminal points. We want to see the farmer secure the advantage of an honest grading, and of the broadest competition in the sale of his wheat. We want to see him fairly treated as to "dockage," see him obtain the profits of the middlemen, and saved from the fearful "waste" of the local elevator. Shipments in car lots will accomplish these ends, and such shipment can be largely made only through the "pooling" scheme we suggest.

The law may not have done all for you it might, but it is your duty to get out of it all the advantage you can, and this can be done only by combining.

We can see how some of you may be personally inconvenienced, may be compelled to make some sacrifices; but we also see how you will be immediately rewarded for what little inconvenience you may be subjected to, and the few sacrifices you may make.

But there is another, broader and more far-reaching reason why we want to see farmers combining for mutual protection and profit. The farmers of Minnesota now have a double incentive for effecting these combinations. One is the immediate reward in a financial senser the other is the more remote, but vastly more important one of learning themselves and teaching others that farmers have the requisite brain, will and unselfishness to conceive and execute combinations when they are necessary to mutual protection and profit.

Farmers have been imposed upon in the past, because of their assumed inability to make any organizations among themselves which are calculated to counteract the effects of organizations made against them. If they will begin in some little corner of this great country to prove that they can combine and work harmoniously to one common end, they will find that they have planted some seed of progress which will grow, spread, and finally ripen into a profitable harvest of respect from their oppressors, and countless advantages to themselves.

Farmers of Minnesota try the power of combination just once! Prove to yourselves and to the country that you can rise superior to the discriminations of antagonistic railroads and the petty tyrannies of local agents, and you will be feared and respected where you are now despised and ill-treated!

Let no petty considerations prevent the carrying out of this plan. If you have no time week days or nights to make arrangements, take Sundays for it. It is quite as sacred labor as lifting a neighbor's ox from the mire, and the Sabbath is none too holy on which to do such laudable work.

If you have an enemy we do not ask you to love him, but just help him market his wheat, and he will help you. If you have any neighborhood quarrels or feuds, forget them till after the wheat is marketed. You have no enemies at home who can work you half the harm of those abroad.

In the organizations of your adversaries the lion and the lamb repose peacefully together, all animosity sunk in a common greed, and all plunder divided without a growl. Take a lesson from them, work together harmoniously and kindly, more harmoniously, and more kindly because your cause is more honest, just and wise.

Stabling Cows at Night.

From the time whereof our memory runneth not to the country, it has been the practice of some farmers or dairymen to yard or stable their cows at night during the summer, or pasturing season, and give them a handful of bran or "a lick of salt" for the purpose of reconciling them to confinement. A New York dairyman has adopted the plan of stabling his cows at night, feeding each four quarts of wheat middlings, costing daily about 8 cents per cow. His idea is that by this plan the cow perfectly digests the grass eaten during the day, instead of again crowding her paunch with an extra ration of grass; the wheat middlings promote an extra milk secretion, and lastly, the manure saved during the summer will return the cost of the purchased grain, for it will be ample to well manure several acres of wheat. Independent of all this he thinks that in the more perfect mastication of the food, and the grain she gets, pay for the grain and even more. It saves going for the cows in the morning, and, unless the farmers has a night pasture, it saves a double tramping of the field each twenty-four hours that gives the grass a better chance. It would seem that if the matter was reserved and the cows turned, during the very hot season to pasture at night, the flies, scalding sun, etc., would be avoided and the cow afforded an undisturbed occasion to "ensilage" a couple of hundred pounds of green grass. Either way would be better during July and August than to suppose that the cow can care for herself and give three gallons of milk per day. In the winter at her time of rest, feeding with hay alone, and standing inside a fence twelve hours out of the twenty-four, regardless of the weather, is the fashion with some farmers to "toughen" their cows into extra milkers. If one does not grow green soiling crops for the cows, try one season, after the "flush" of feed is gone, giving each cow a grain ration, and with those that respond best with increased messes add to it in such cases, and see where the limit of profit is reached.

HOW TO SELECT A COW.

The best milk cow, as a rule, says a writer in the Agricultural Gazette, is of medium size and small-boned. The head is small, and rather long, narrow between the horns and wide between the eyes. The lips are long and thick, giving the muzzle a flat appearance. The ears are thin, covered with long, but soft, silky hair, the inside of the ear being of a rich orange color. The eyes are large and bright, with a placid expression, the horns set on a high pate, bending outward at the base, and light, clear and smooth; the neck long, clean, and thin, slender and well cut under the thrort, thickening handsomely as it approaches the shoulder, but entirely free from anything like a "beefy" appearance. The shoulder-blades should meet narrow at the tip, widening gradually towards the points, which should be broad and well-rounded; the ribs rather straight and wide, indicating a good digestion, for everything depends on that in a good milk cow. The loins should be broad and the hips high and wide; the rump even with the hips; the pelvis wide, giving plenty of room for the unner; the thighs thin; the hind legs a little crooked, and small below the hock, with long, large foot. The udder should be long and broad with the teats all the same size and well set apart; the belly to sag a little in front of the udder, and rise slowly as it approaches the brisket, and somewhat large as compared with the size of the cow. The tail long and slim, tapering gently to the end. The hair must be soft, indicating a mellow skin, which, on taking in the hand, feels like soft kid gloves, and no course, rough hair will grow on such skin. The color of the skin should be of a rich butter-yellow. This is the first point in handling. Then, pass your hand on the belly in front of the udder and feel the "milk veins." They are an infallible mark of a good milk cow. The larger they are the better the indications. In extra good cows they branch out into four veins, but they all unite before reaching the udder. The more irregular the course the more sure you may be the cow is a good milker. The udder should be covered with a short, downy coat of hair. This hair should begin to turn its backward course from the front teats, then on the back part of the udder, called the escutcheon, and on as far as the vulva, in the best cows. The wider the belt of this upturned hair the better; it should be short and velvety, covering a soft orange-colored skin.

THE ABOVE CUT IS A CORRECT REPRESENTATION OF SOME

GRADE HOLSTEIN CALVES

That may now be seen on my place two miles north of Crookston, (S½ Section 8, town of Crookston.) It also shows the benefits to be derived from the use of thoroughbred sires. The thoroughbred Holstein bull, will be found by those who try him to be one of the best of this valuable breed.

EVERETT

PEDIGREE OF EVERETT:

Registered in the next volume of Holstein Herd Book. Calved Jan. 9th, 1883; sire, Angus, (907 H. H. B.) dam Beth, [1743 H. H. B.] Beth was calved April 9th, 1880; bred by P. S. De Boes, Oostorwierum, Friesland. Imported May, 1881, by Wm. Koch, New York City. She was one of the best cows ever imported, having a milk record of 81½ lbs per day when fresh.

EVERETT!

Is described in the herd book as follows: Evenly variegated; head fine; neck fine; horns small and fine; shoulders low and well formed; body round and long; chine medium; hips broad; quarters heavy; limbs fine; handling good; escutcheon best.

EVERETT will be allowed 25 cows upon the following terms: For thoroughbred Holstein cows $10. For native cows and grades of any breed $5 to insure. For other particulars call on me at the farm, or address me at Crookston.

Holstein cattle are popular because they are the greatest milk producers known; they produce the most butter and cheese; are very large, fat easily and make excellent beef. As a breed they are remarkably docile and easily managed; are very hardy and give the very best satisfaction; they make the very best family and town cows in the world. They possess more desirable qualities than any other breed.---Rural World.

'ROUND HOME.

California grapes in three varieties at Herb's Branch.

The Commercial House sports a handsome new sign.

Pretty cold weather this week, but splendid for harvesting.

Chicken hunters report a scarcity of that kind of fruit this fall.

Sheriff Zwickey has indulged in the purchase of a handsome piano.

Everybody busy in the harvest fields. This week will see the bulk of the wheat in this county in the shock.

Mrs. V. D. Carruth left for Chenango County, N. Y., on Friday evening last, on a visit to friends at the old home.

Ed. George has just returned from a visit to friends at Rochester, Minn. He reports crops looking worse there than here.

The new post office is nearly completed and is going to be a daisy. The boys expect to take possession Saturday evening.

The finest display of fruits ever made in the city can be seen this week at Herb's Branch.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Wile start this week on a visit to friends in Indiana. Mr. W. will be absent six weeks and Mrs. W. until November.

Herb must get more room or else be too crowded for any use. If he had a building covering a 40 acre lot he'd fill it plum full.

H. M. Pierce reports the arrival of a fine Guernsey heifer calf on Monday. That's commencing the week in good shape. H. M. is going to show some grand milkers pretty quick.

The delegates appointed to the River and Harbor Convention at St. Paul, by the Chamber of Commerce, are: Frank Ives, H. Steenerson, W. F. Zwickey, E. D. Childs and E. M. Walsh.

Ole Bang has our thanks for a bottle of excellent home made grape wine. It was made from native grapes two years ago this fall and Ole has a quantity on hand for medical purposes only.

Sheriff McQuade, of Duluth, has summoned Sheriff Zwickey to Duluth to witness the execution of the murderer Wesenen, officially, on Friday next. The Sheriff leaves this evening via St. Paul.

Charlie Seely is bound to keep up with the times. Among other recent improvements we notice a new zinc floor at his neat and attractive little place on Second street. Drop in and see how cosily Charlie has everything arranged.

Sheriff Zwickey and Ed. Walsh went over to Grand Forks to paint that city black, last week. We see by the Grand Forks papers that they have secured the big roller mills and other jobs. The Grand Forkers evidently know a good thing when they see it.

Last week a party of surveyors of the St. P., M. & M. railroad arrived and commencing on the north line of Section three, at Carman, run a line southeast. It is said that their objective point is Brainerd, via Leech Lake. This looks like a road to Duluth.

Some complaints have reached us of hunters recklessly driving through standing grain. We could hardly believe that any of our citizens would be mean enough to trample down a man's fields in this lawless manner if it did not come from a very reliable source. We have this much to say about it that anybody who would thus wilfully destroy property ought to be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Farmers have enough to contend against in the natural course of events without having their crops destroyed in this ruthless manner.

Do you remember those dandy Studio's? Herb has a fresh lot just received.

Warren Sheaf: We are sorry to learn that our friend Dr. C. Stoddard Smith whom many of our readers know, has disposed of his landed and other interests in Kittson County, and is about to take up his residence in Chicago. His appointment to the superintendency of the Chicago College of Dental Surgery at remunerative salary is an acknowledgement of his superior worth in his profession, a compliment worthily bestowed. We are sorry to lose the Dr. from the valley, for his able pen has been used on many occasions in advocacy of the rights of farmers and against the oppression of monopolists. His removal from among us will be a loss to this district.

The Studio, the best nickel cigar in the market is having a big run at Herb's.

An open meeting of the "Equitable Aid Union" will be held in Lawrence Hall, on Friday evening, Aug. 28th, at 8 o'clock p. m., and addressed by the Supreme President, of Columbus, Pa. The object of the Order is benevolence, education and mutual protection. One dollar and fifty cents per month in this order will carry a benefit certificate of from $800 to $3,000, according to age, less than would be required to pay the taxes on a like valuation of real estate. Every husband and wife should attend this meeting when all its principles will be explained. This order has existed here for about four years and the truthfulness of the foregoing will be vouched for by many estimable citizens of this place.

The Mayor has appointed H. E. Cooke and A. D. Stephens as delegates to the River and Harbor Convention at St. Paul next week.

The Pixie is a new candidate for the public favor. Some think it excels even the Studio at the same price. Herb has the sole agency.

Frank Jerome is going to move the livery barn, corner of Ash and Robert Sts., a few rods south and will build a large hotel in its place.

To the stranger within our gates Herb's Branch resembles a regular city market place where everything abounds in profusion. They all wonder how he dare bring in such a variety in such great quantities. You can find all kinds of tropical fruits in their season and the temperate and even the frigid zones are made to contribute to the stock. Herb says "whats the odds, as long as you're happy?"

A Sudden Death.

On Saturday morning at 5 o'clock Dr. A. Gaboury died at his residence on Second street, of inflamation of the bowels. The doctor was taken on Tuesday evening and died as above. He had been for several years practicing medicine in our city and was universally respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and two small children to mourn his untimely loss. His funeral was largely attended on Monday. The Cornet Band, of which he was a member, led the procession. This is the second member of the Band lost by death within a few weeks.

EUCLID ITEMS.

EUCLID, Aug. 24, 1885.

Weather very cool and fearful of a frost.

Springer Harbaugh, of St. Paul, is spending a few days on Keystone farm.

T. C. McCracken, express agent at this place, is on his farm near Warren during harvest. His brother, Gene McCracken, takes his place during his absence.

Mr. S. P. Norton, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, Crookston, paid our city a visit on Sunday last.

Mr. Robert Fairweather, on Thursday last, shipped his thresher engine to Argyle to be used in his large wheat elevator at that place.

Mrs. Wm. Davidson and sister are visiting the Lockhart farm at Rolette, Minn.

E. C. Murney has painted his new blacksmith shop brown. Ed says that's the way he intends to do business.

Everybody that can borrow a gun goes out duck shooting now-a-days.

The Euclid Signal is a very neat little paper. Its object is to save lives and give notice of church festivals. It "Beggs" well and will no doubt meet with great success.

Mr. C. E. Southmayd came in Saturday from his farm in the Thirteen Towns, where he has been spending his summer vacation. He will teach the East Grand Forks school the coming season, commencing August 31st. Mr. Southmayd is a good teacher and the scholars will no doubt like their new teacher. We wish him success.

Steam Boiler Inspection.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 23, 1885.

Jas. E. Morresy, Esq., Crookston.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 13th received and I appreciate the kindness. I do not think much of newspaper controversies as they are generally endless when once begun, but if you will say that the Inspector for the northern district has at all times and in all places endeavored to make the inspections, so far as possible, at the convenience of boiler owners, and certainly nothing but ignorant arrogance of power would put thresher owners to the inconvenience of hauling machines to town and laying off for days. I travel mostly by team and personally visit and inspect the boilers wherever they may be at my own expense for transportation. My district is very large and owing to the late date we got to work, the date of our appointments being April 15th, and it taking a month to get blanks printed, tools made, etc., it will be very late when we get to your city. Next year it will be different, as we can get to work at least three or four months earlier. I have done all the work in St. Louis, Carlton, Pine, Isanti, Chisago, Anoka, Sherburne, Stearns Douglas, and portions of other counties, and expect to be in Fergus Falls about Sept. 10th. I have inspected several hundred boilers of all kinds, most of which have been running since, and certainly if the water test was dangerous, a number of explosions must have followed me up, but on the contrary I have heard of none whatever. We have found a large number of dangerous defects which we have caused to be repaired when possible. We have been welcomed, as a rule, and the exceptions are either ignorance of the value of an inspection, or recklessly taking risks on boilers that they knew were unsafe. We find steam gauges as much as 40 pounds out of truth, and safety valves that no pressure could start; blisters and cracks that were unthought of, and all sorts of defects. As you say, the cold water test is used by the United States government inspectors, as well as the English, French, Canadian, and many others, some of them as high as 3 to 1, instead of 1½ to 1 as ours is. Take a thresher boiler, 150 pounds of water pressure is certainly not as hard as the same pressure of steam, for the reason that there is an equal expansion of all the parts owing to the temperature being the same in all parts; and also the idea that 1½ to 1 gives a straining pressure is false, for boiler strength is figured with a factor of safety of 6, so that our test pressure is really 3-12 of the bursting strain, and it is a well known fact that iron is not crippled until the elastic limit is overreached, which in our case is not half reached.

Yours truly,

C. A. SELEY.

Mrs. Agnes Gaboury desires to take this method to publicly return sincere thanks to the many kind friends who rendered assistance during the last illness of her husband, Dr. Aime Gaboury.

BEAUDRY, Polk Co., Minn., Aug. 21.

The wheat harvest is well under way, and we can now make some calculations as to the yield. The straw is very heavy; after shelling out some of my best wheat, my estimate would be 60 per cent. of last year's crop. I have conversed with different parties in our town and their estimates range from 55 per cent. to 66 per cent. of last year's crop. The thresher, I think, will not say over 60 per cent.

Crookston, Aug. 29, 1885.

In Memory of Ulysses S. Grant.

Address of the Fort Leavenworth Monument Committee!

At a meeting held at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, August 3d, 1885, it was resolved to erect a monument to the memory of General U. S. Grant on the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation. A committee of five gentlemen from each of the States of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Texas, Arkansas, and all States and Territories west of the Mississippi, including the Governors of each of these States, and five officers of the Regular Army stationed in the Department of the Mississippi, was provided for. This committee is to have charge of the work of collecting funds, preparing plans, and erecting the proposed monument, and was authorized to appoint all necessary sub-committees.

The idea of erecting a monument to the memory of the distinguished soldier and statesman meets with hearty approval by all classes of citizens of the west. The selection of the national grounds at Fort Leavenworth is deemed peculiarly appropriate for such a purpose.

The committee appointed appeals to the people of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi for contributions in aid of the object in view, and it is suggested:

First, that contributions be taken up for the "Grant Monument Fund, at all the memorial meetings held on the day of the funeral and transmitted to Captain F. H. Hathaway, U. S. A., Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, who has been selected as Treasurer of the Monument Committee.

Second, that the Post Commander, Adjutant and Quartermaster of every Grand Army Post in the territory named, be constituted a committee for the purpose of soliciting funds, which money, when collected, shall be transmitted to the Department Commander of the G. A. R. for the State in which it was collected, and by him transmitted to the Treasurer of the Monument Committee Captain F. H. Hathaway, U. S. A., Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Third, that Citizens' committees be formed in every city, town and school district throughout the territory named, who shall collect funds and forward the same to the Treasurer.

Fourth, that the State and Territorial Superintendents throughout the country west of the Mississippi be earnestly requested to address all the schools within their jurisdiction, and request that on some day to be designated by the Superintendents, a collection be taken among the school children. The amounts thus raised to be forwarded to the State Superintendents and by them transmitted to the Treasurer.

Fifth, that the active co-operation of all religious denominations be invoked, and that they be asked to make similar collections on a day to be fixed by the Bishops, or other presiding authorities.

Sixth, that the county, city, town and chartered corporations, business firms and industrial associations throughout the territory named be requested to raise a fund for the monument.

Seventh, contributions to the monument fund will be received from the officers and soldiers of the Regular Army by post and company commanders, and by them transmitted to the Treasurer of the Monument Committee, Captain F. H. Hathaway, U. S. A., at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

It is proposed that, in all cases where a fund is raised by the special efforts of any body of citizens, civic, military or religious, as by the Grand Army, the schools, any religious organization, the railroad employes, the Regulr Army, etc., that the fact shall be specially acknowledged, in a memorial stone bearing a suitable inscription, placed in the proposed monument.

The undersigned, a special committee appointed to act until the general monument committee is formed, issue this address in order that the work of raising funds may be immediately commenced. The committee representing the State of Kansas has already been named, as follows: Gov. John A. Martin; Col. M. Stewart, Department Commander G. A. R.; State Superintendent J. H. Lawhead; Bishop W. X. Ninde, of the M. E. Church, and S. F. Neely, Mayor of Leavenworth. The other State committees will be announced as soon as possible.

The Manitoba Railroad.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 21.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railroad was held here to-day, at which 165,240 shares of stock, out of 200,000, were represented. The following board of directors was elected: James J. Hill, St. Paul; George Stephens and Donald A. Smith, Montreal; John S. Kennedy, D. Willis, James and Samuel Thorne, New York; Henry D. Minot, Boston. The only change made in the board was the election of Henry D. Minot, representing the Boston stockholders, in place of Marshall Field, of Chicago. At the meeting of the new board of directors held this afternoon the following officers for the ensuing year were elected: James J. Hill, president; John S. Kennedy, vice president; Edward Sawyer, secretary and treasurer. The joint report of the president and directors made to the stockholders showed the gross earnings for the past year to be $7,973,740; operating expenses, taxes and interest, $5,490,208; dividend, $1,300,000.

Fairs, and No Fairs.

Twelve hundred fairs are to be held in the States and Territories this autumn. In view of the great importance of the county and other local fairs, we are surprised to learn from our responses that there are nearly four hundred counties (397,) in which no fairs will be held this year. These counties are distributed among the States as follows:

Alabama	29	Maryland	2
Arkansas	31	Michigan	7
California	8	New Hampshire	1
Colorado	10	North Carolina	26
Connecticut	1	Nevada	3
Dakota	22	New Mexico	1
Delaware	1	New Jersey	5
Florida	8	Ohio	2
Georgia	38	Oregon	1
Indiana	5	Pennsylvania	10
Illinois	9	Rhode Island	1
Iowa	17	South Carolina	6
Idaho	2	Texas	12
Kansas	9	Tennessee	22
Kentucky	28	Utah	1
Louisiana	17	Virginia	7
Minnesota	7	Washington Territory	1
Mississippi	17	Wisconsin	3
Missouri	23	West Virginia	1
Montana	3	Wyoming	1

In many instances the reports stated, "No fairs now held;" "No interest in the matter;" Efforts made, but unsuccessful;" "Defunct;" "Suspended;" "Failed for want of patronage;" "Lack of interest on the part of the people;" "So poor we can't afford a fair;" "Not enterprise enough; a camp-meeting is the hight of ambition here;" "People haven't the pluck or energy to get up a fair;" "Have had none for ten or twelve years," etc. The chief reason why no fairs are now held in these counties, is evidently "a lack of interest on the part of the people." If "the people" are expected to institute a fair, these counties will probably remain fair-less for many years to come. Considerable experience in such matters has shown us, that the holding of, and the success of a fair, depends upon a few public-spirited workers. Most frequently a single individual is the motive power. He imparts his enthusiasm, his "go," a few others, and these together form a Board of Management, which acts upon the community as a leaven, and success follows.—[American Agriculturist for September.

The American Agriculturist for September, 1885, presents a variety of articles pertaining to the farm, garden, hearth, and household. The opening illustration, "On September Days," by Bennett, is a very appropriate engraving. There are a large number of other illustrations, describing farm scenes, horses, prize cattle and other animals, farm implements and garden tools, new variety of vegetables and flowers, house plants, etc., etc. R. G. Newton describes a Dakota machine for twisting up hay for fuel; Jos. Harris treats of burning stubble, mutton and Merinos. Dr. Thurber contributes a number of horticultural and other articles. Henry Stewart discourses upon curing corn-fodder, value of roots, and how to get the most butter. Col. Weld writes about milk, slinking in cows, and the cow's udder. Wm. A. Coleman describes the use of sand on the nursery packing-ground. In the household department, A. C. Sage describes some luncheon dishes; and M. P. C. tells the story of a good dinner made from fragments. There are a number of contrivances for household and adornment. The boys' and girls' columns are replete with interest, and the doctor talks about some curious plants. The leading feature of this number is a list of twelve hundred fairs, the most complete thing of the kind ever gotten up; and furthermore a list of four hundred counties where no fairs are to be held. The humbug columns expose new swindling schemes. Price $1.50 a year. Single number, 15 cts. Address Publishers American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, N. Y.

The Dorcas for September has been received, and we find it steadily improves. The editor (a woman of great ability) and the publishers strive to please their patrons and spare no expense to fill its pages with good and thorough instructions in knitting, crocheting and embroidery. All the designs that are not original come from abroad, thus making it a magazine worth having in every household, as the same directions are not found elsewhere, and will all be found explicit and correct. In each number we find new novelties in every line of fancy work, and have decided that Dorcas is the best magazine of its kind in existence. Its subscription price is only $1 per year and 10 cents for single copy. We advise all to send for the latter, without fail. Address, Dorcas, 872 Broadway, New York.

The State Fair. Notice to Farmers!

Crookston, Minn., August 17th, 1885.

Dear Sir:

You have undoubtedly seen in the papers that this year will be the first time that the State Fair is held on its own grounds, between St. Paul and Minneapolis, devoted exclusively to annual exhibitions. Very large permanent buildings have been put up and the contributions from various States as to blooded stock, etc., warrant the supposition that this Fair will offer attractions never before attempted. As a result, an immense concourse of people from neighboring States is expected, and a number of railroads are making unusual efforts for a grand display. In order to counteract the exaggerated and damaging reports circulated by rival interests in regard to our rainy season to the effect that no good crops can be raised in POLK, MARSHALL or KITTSON Counties in a wet season like this, it is the intention of the Land Commissioner to add to the display of this Railroad as a special feature an EXHIBIT OF THE PRODUCTS OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY, ALL BY ITSELF.

I have been instructed to solicit contributions for this purpose. Will you kindly assist me in carrying out the program? If the farmers in the Red River Valley will contribute a little of the best their farms produce we can get up an exhibit that will astonish the people and will demonstrate beyond a doubt, that, FIRST, we can raise good crops if we do have as much rain as would ruin the crops in any other country, and, SECOND, that if we can get up a show like this, after so much rain, the products of THE RED RIVER VALLEY in any ordinary kind of season, can

BEAT THE BALANCE OF THE WORLD STONE BLIND.

The crop of '83 has shown how much drouth the soil can stand, the crop of '85 will show that the soil can absorb more water than any other country. The farmers of the Red River Valley can furnish the proof at the coming State Fair if they want to. Will you help me do it?

What is Wanted for the Exhibition.

Samples of wheat, oats, barley and rye, pulled up by the roots, selecting long, clean straw with long heads, in bundles about six inches in diameter. Grain pulled up by the roots is preferred; if the grain is cut the bundles to be four to six inches in diameter. We also want to exhibit flax, wild and tame grasses. (GRASSES ARE VERY EARNESTLY SOLICITED.) Also vegetables of all kinds, corn in the ear or stalk, wild fruits; in short anything that will show up well.

Contributors are requested to mark their exhibits with their NAME and POST OFFICE, or the name of the nearest station on the Railroad, and to leave them with the nearest station agent who will take care of them until they are collected.

Farmers near EAST GRAND FORKS may leave their samples at the house of Mr. W. C. Nash.

People in the vicinity of CROOKSTON will please call with their samples at my office over the Merchants' National Bank. I have provided a storage room near the station.

For the collection of the contributions I shall visit the following places with a special baggage car at the dates named. You are requested to bring your samples NOT LATER THAN THE DAY PREVIOUS: Samples will be received any time between now and that day except Sunday. The car will be

At ST. HILAIRE—Saturday, August 29th.

At EAST GRAND FORKS AND FISHER—Monday, August 31st.

At HALLOCK, KENNEDY, STEPHEN, ARGYLE, WARREN, ANGUS, EUCLID, BELTRAMI AND ROLETTE, on Wednesday, September 2d, and will go from Rolette with the passenger train to St. Paul and thence to the Fair grounds.

People in the vicinity of Crookston will please deposit their contributions any time before the 1st day of September.

In conclusion, I will say that if you will devote a little time to select and contribute some nice samples of the best productions of your farm we can make an exhibit which will do the Red River Valley more good, and will counteract the unfavorable reports of rival interests far better than thousands of dollars spent in advertising pamphlets. Will you help me to get up a big show?

Yours very truly,
JOHN KNUPPE,
Gen'l agent of the St. P. M. & M. Land Department for Polk, Marshall and Kittson Counties.

The station agents are supplied with labels to mark your exhibits. Please show this to your neighbors who did not receive a circular. Let us all pull together.
